CHAPTERS ON REFORM.

The Necessities of New-York and How to Meet Them.

BY NON-PARTISAN.

At a time when a great cause of common interest requires of every citizen the utmost exertions, it is needless to ask consent or make apology for submitting these suggestions to the Committee of Seventy, to the Young Men's Reform Association, to the members of the Legislature, and to all men and women who have an opportunity or feel a duty to co-operate in the noble work of Reform; or for again signing myself, NON-PARTISAN.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 20, 1871.

CLASS I.—THE LESSON AND THE ADMONITION OF THE ELECTIONS.

There can be no doubt that the stupendous frauds disclosed in New-York City were decisive of the late elections. The results as well as the means through which they were accomplished, are full of significance. It is most important to the public interest that these unexampled events should be rightly interpreted, and if so inferior matters were worthy attention at this time, it would be worth while to ask every man who hopes to share the public favor to look carefully at the nature of the political forces now paramount. There is a crisis in our City and State politics, and a new political spirit is exercising sway. Let us take a glance backward and forward and see if we can interpret this crisis.

When the Tammany Ring and the Erie Ring and the several subordinate rings united, there was developed a new controlling spirit in our politics. It was a stupendous power of mischief, and a steady propulsion to public corruption and ruin. It made a sort of spoils party in the name of politics and public interests, but it was, in fact, wholly selfish and mercenary, the like of which was never seen here, and was never known elsewhere in the world. It was little less than an organized band of political pirates. The party that nourished that power was in part corrupted and in part coerced by it, and finally became its open and shameless accomplice. The official leader who might have arrested the cause of this ominous supremacy of all the elements of corruption in his own party was unequal to the occasion. The veto power was industriously, but not boldly or faithfully applied. No mite of legislative folly escaped the executive vision, but the great beams of party corruption were allowed to fall freely upon the backs of the people. And our only consolation for the failings of the past is that the little and the great, the leaders, the low partisans, and the kingpins are now burning on one funeral pile together in the admonishing fires of a righteous public wrath.

Every bad element in and out of political life—venal ignorance, Irish bigotry, crafty and corrupt party leaders, Jesuit priests, the reckless managers of great corporations, every man in the legal profession, the mercantile circles, or connected with the public Press, in whom the love of gain was stronger than the sense of public duty—joined to swell the ranks of that new power of corruption. There was inaugurated a saturnalia of fraud, extravagance, falsehood and venality, without a parallel.

The party that should have unanimously opposed that power, was in part bribed and bought by it; but the great bulk of the members of the party at all times resisted that power, and denounced such of its own leaders and journals as had become minions and hirelings of the Rings. Such finally was the audacity of the villainies and peculation, that the people were made indignant and alarmed, and they arose in the majesty of their moral and intellectual force, and soon the moral sentiment and the higher public opinion of the City became the dominant elements of the hour. Good men in both parties were united, knaves in office and traitors out of office were frightened. Great numbers of the rank and file of both parties no longer obeying their old leaders or conforming themselves to their old party methods, freely complied with the demands of the moral element—the great voice of the people. The worthiest of the party leaders also obeyed the impulse and rose to the duties of the occasion, and the baser of those in both parties fell to various depths; some only to the shades of contempt, some to a political purgatory, and some to unfathomable moral perdition. They are of no consequence. The elections were conducted partly according to party methods, yet without much regard to party principles; and the motive power and the aim were not partisan, but were the spirit of constructive moral reform and the well being of the people. The victory, then, is mainly due to that non-partisan, intelligent moral sentiment and sense of public duty on the part of the honest, intelligent portion of the people. It is not only a triumph over base officials and a pernicious municipal system, but is also an emphatic condemnation of party leaders and party machinery for the City. Still parties are by no means superceded, nor their proper sphere of their honest methods questioned or limited. Neither one party, nor both parties together, can appropriate this victory; yet it cannot be said that one party met the crisis as fairly and wisely, or that it has come out of it as successfully as the other, and the share of the honor and of the rewards may be claimed, not in the ratio of the partisan, but of the moral and non-partisan element in each party, which has swayed the personal action of its members.

The intelligent correspondent of a foreign journal says of it, that—"it was not properly a fight between Democrats and Republicans—it was a revolution—an uprising of the people, irrespective of party lines and considerations, against fraud in official station," and he might have added, against a pernicious system of elections, which facilitates fraud and discourages honest voters. The simple fact is that the City elections was the first great act in a sort of municipal revolution. Those who do not comprehend it as such, and act on that theory, will find themselves crushed by the stern, resistless power of a revolutionary spirit. Previous to the Ring-rule of ruffianism, political jobbery, Jesuit priests and Irish bigotry, which this election has overthrown, the political parties had, in the main, represented the public opinion of the City; though for many years the moral tone of party action had been steadily falling below the moral tone of public opinion. The accession of ruffianism and political jobbery to power, was the surrender of all principle and all honor in party to all that was vile, and all that was mercenary, and all that was venal among its followers. The one policy of such a power was the greatest number of venal votes and the greatest amount of public stealings; the latter to be divided between the voters who were bought, the journals and leaders who were bribed, and the officials and Ring leaders who were in power. The only alternatives of the City under such rule were speedy ruin or a speedy revolution.

That revolution has come, and it, too, has brought into existence a new power, which in one particular is like the Ring power. Neither was strictly the birth of party, but both were born of elements outside of party. The Ring power came from below, but this power of the revolution has come from above party. Unlike the Ring power, which was developed in secrecy and matured by false pretenses so that it had attained to a tyranny almost unawares, this new power, springing from the open indignation of the people, uttered itself boldly in the columns of public journals and in the open meetings of the people. It comes in the name and on behalf of all honest men and women; and demands not votes, nor money, nor grog-shops, nor universal license for all that is vicious, nor omnipotent power in the caucus, nor that all the offices shall be given to those who make a trade of politics; but it demands honesty, economy, the best men for office, free schools where the children shall attend, and that Jesuit priests shall let alone an efficient City administration, in the interest of order, decency and comfort; and generally that the City administration, which is a great organization of business, shall be managed without regard to party principle or to the election of a Governor, or a President, or a State Prison Inspector. It is the stern voice of an indignant, outraged community that has borne much and will not be trifled with, or longer robbed and insulted; and men in office and men who want office will do well to heed it.

This non-partisan power will watch and sternly judge every man it has placed in office, or who has crawled or bought his way into office; and whoever attempts to serve himself, his friends or his party, instead of the people, will be speedily brought to an account. Old politicians and young aspirants will do well to take note of the spirit and the temper of the public mind, if they would escape the fate of the trading politicians who now lie hopelessly stranded along our political shores, with all their aspirations of office, from those that reached the Presidency down to those that rested their eyes on a clerkship, blighted forever. If I mistake not, the earnest, hard-worked professional men and men of business in New-York City, who have devoted so much thought, time and money to putting down the great joint stock conspiracy of scoundrelism, Jacobitism, Jesuitism and venality, do not mean to leave these elements the same dangerous facility of absolute rule which they possessed before. I have before attempted to point out the true method of preventing such a result. If some such organic relief be not provided, it is very plain that the same elements of corruption will soon unite on their old work of mercenary and rowdy co-operation. The people who have achieved this great deliverance cannot be always expected to devote so much time to politics, and they must, therefore, at this time, as fully as possible protect themselves against the robbers always ready to attack them. Very much depends upon what is done at the coming session. For the first time in a long period the higher intelligence and public morality of the community take the lead and wield political power. The mass of average intelligence, and all the degraded portion of the community, which together make up the majority of voters, will look carefully on to see whether loud professions are to be realized, and whether legislation shall be accomplished better than that which came of the authority just overthrown. It is a critical moment, and the responsibility of legislators and of the journals which undertake to express public opinion is very great. The power overthrown led and ruled the masses by cajoling, bribing and deceiving them. How is the new power to lead them? What is it to do for them? Can it maintain its supremacy short of convincing them by positive acts that it is sagacious and disinterested; or otherwise than by showing them that a government by the honest and intelligent portion of the population is better for the poor and the ignorant than a government by mercenary partisans and reckless political tradesmen? Most of the men who have come to power have not had legislative experience, and it is one of the evil results of our politics that but little thought has been bestowed by our high-toned citizens upon the methods of public affairs. The task of ruling is not so light as most of them imagine, and they are likely not to find it so easy to do that which will give them strength and the people confidence as they find it to complain of everything which has been done by others.

Let us now glance at the three great obstacles in the way of accomplishing the objects of this resolution:

1. There will be found a number of men in the Legislature who will say, the rascals are now overthrown, and their system is dead. The public excitement is expended. All who have worked so hard will return to their business, and forget politics,—scoundrels and honest political workers alike. There is no use, they will say, to trouble ourselves with anything new. Political affairs will soon resume their old course, only a little purified—a little honester; until in due time, as always happens, the rogues gradually and secretly work themselves into power again. When they do, the people will rise again and put them down. We shall always, they say, so on engaging in this way. Those who keep the middle track are the wisest; and (which is the main thing) are just as likely as anybody else to get the offices. There is a small measure of truth in all this, but in the main it is the creed of the cowardly, the indolent, the meanly ambitious; the men who are just too honest to steal like a Ring leader; and altogether too selfish and callous to begin any attack on such leaders, or to join in any until it has become popular. It is, too, the creed of the political fatalist, who is usually a religious fatalist as well. He has no constructive power, no political faith, no moral energy, is a drone in every work, and a brake on every movement of reform. The journals and the people must look to such fellows; and they will not wince at tufts of grass; they deserve the largest pebbles. No men of this class, no such leadership, can either secure the needed reforms or prevent the new power being specdily overthrown. The powers of evil and political selfishness are always active and aggressive, always full-propagating and prolific. Our statutes have been long stayed in the interests of mercenary partisanship and personal scoundrelism. A great affirmative work is needed in the interest of honesty and the public welfare. There is a great deal of bad legislative work to be undone, as well as of new work to be accomplished. The problem of so governing a great city that there shall not be a controlling tendency to degradation, and a steady growth of corruption in the lowest class, is one we have not solved yet, and it is one which the methods of fatalists will never solve. The great city will steadily sink, while they coldly and blindly look on. There must be an affirmative, active exertion of public authority directed to the end of raising, comforting, enlightening and protecting the lower strata of city life. The work is hardly begun; is, indeed, not in the public mind; and is but poorly appreciated by even the most thoughtful. The development of such measures in legislation is a fit work for a party, if unfortunately a unison of party action is not possible. The practical administration in the City, however, must be by non-partisan officials, just as in the General Government we have non-partisan Generals, and Admirals.

Instead of listening to these fatalistic and do-nothing sophistries, the Legislature should appoint a commission of earnest, able men at this session, who should investigate during the recess, and should report to the next session, the proper improvements needed in the City charter—as only an imperfect one is possible at this session—and in the administration, and what further legislation is required for the elevation of the condition of the poor, the ignorant and the vicious classes of New-York City. The Commissioners should set forth the reasons and statistics at length, and should have power to examine papers and witnesses, and should submit drafts of legislation. This would concentrate a wholesome public attention, would lay the basis for wise legislation, and would enable the Legislature to have before it at the opening of the session carefully prepared drafts of bills. Very soon, under such a policy, the City Government would be made a power for good, and an organization of consistency, economy, and public intelligence. Ten thousand dollars expended in this way might in every year to come save a hundred thousand otherwise lost by reason of inapt and inadequate methods, to say nothing of higher moral and educational influences that might be secured.

2. Another obstruction of the work that should be done, will be the rump of the old Ring rule of the City, united with some of their hirelings in the Republican Party. They will to some extent be aided by better men, who have so long moved along the old party ruts that they will need a great lift to raise them to the broad plane of the new and higher public opinion. These men will say to Republicans, the Democratic Party has the majority in the City, and you have the majority in the State. Let us come to an agreement as to the offices and lower places all round; we, of course, having a fair share. Both parties must and will do better than they have done, but all of us who have worked so long in the ranks and in the caucuses, ought to have the offices and the profits. You cannot tell how soon we will come into power again, and we will remember what is done now. Both parties must give the people some of the best men who have worked in the ranks under the old order of things. Such men must be rewarded. The people have no right to ask more of us. They will soon get cool and leave politics wholly to us again. This reasoning will be hard for some men to resist. There is danger from it. The people must be awake, and insist on having party rule utterly abandoned in this City, now, while they have the power. The best men must be put in office, regardless of party opinions and old party service. Any reorganization that does not proceed on this theory will be only partisan government in a modified form, which will soon develop the old evils inherent in its application to a great City. The people and the journals must therefore keep their eyes on this manufactory of mischief.

3. The other source of peril is from the large Republican majority. Among those composing it, may be found some bad fellows who will secretly and for base motives obstruct all stringent measures of reform, but their number will be small, and I do not regard them as any occasion of anxiety. The danger is from two other and opposite elements of that party. One of these elements is a class of men who will accept the suggestions of the Democrats, to which I have already referred, and which cannot be said to be really corrupt, but only purely and selfishly partisan. The co-operation of these two elements, after the old party methods, might control the Legislature, and divide between them the offices now and in subsequent years. They would be reinforced (especially if beguiled into any questionable legislation) by all those knaves of both parties, who if their votes would make a majority, could extort thousands from the many public robbers and bribed hirelings of the old lobby, whose stay outside the State Prisons may depend on the sufficiency of their dishonest fortunes to control the votes of members of this Legislature. The other respectable element from which there is peril is that of intense partisanship, not a little sharpened by personal ambition and the spirit of political retaliation. To act on it would be an insult to the noble, unselfish men of both parties who have united in achieving so great a victory; and it would be an unmitigated act of political perfidy and folly. It would be a flagrant disregard of that high-toned public opinion which has been the strength and soul of our Municipal revolution. It would not only be a disgrace to the Republican Party, but it would be its ruin. It would be a capitulation of the Republican Party to its base elements, exactly the same in kind, though by no means absolutely so base as that made by the Democratic Party when it capitulated to the united Tammany, Erie and Judicial Rings. The facts are that unadulterated party selfishness constitutes the lower strata of Republicanism in this State, just as unadulterated personal rascality constitutes the lower strata of Democracy. Such a shock would be given to public confidence in all pretense of disinterested party action that the work of Municipal reform would be thrown back a quarter of a century, and the very Rings would be recalled for a commutation of public abhorrence. They would be made relatively respectable. The curse of the legislation for the City has been its extreme partisanship; and the great significance of the present movement has been the predominance of an element above mere party. The honest, disinterested people have gained the victory, and they require that the well-being of the community shall alone be regarded in the new order of things. They have now accomplished, in regard to the whole City Government, just what a portion of them long since accomplished for the Police, the Fire Department and the Board of Health. They were then unable to secure non-partisan Boards, because the selfish politicians, who did nothing to promote those laws, came swarming around like hungry vultures and controlled the appointments and made them partisan. Politicians have since continually meddled with these Boards to their great injury, and now is the time to restore them, and to place all parts of the City Government under the rule of honest and able men, irrespective of party opinions and independent of party contest and party aspirants. Let it be made a municipal misdemeanor for any person to demand, or any City official to pay, any tax or percentage for any party purpose whatever. If such results cannot be secured, this revolution will lose half its glory, and the future will be exposed to a speedy return of iniquities. Let all the eyes of the public Press, and all the guardians of the people look to these perils, and thus our labor may be made to survive in permanent legislation in the interests of good government.

OUR STATE INSTITUTIONS—XX.

The Buffalo Iron-Works.

BUFFALO, Tuesday, Jan. 16, 1872.

A Birmingham man, traveling through the State of New-York, would, on entering the City of Buffalo, exclaim as he gazed from the windows of his drawing-room car, and vainly tried to count the curving lines of smoke and the bustling puffs of steam issuing from its innumerable iron-works; "Ah! I am at last at home, even in this strange land!" And so he would be. Buffalo, in this respect, is Birmingham en miniature. Unless he walked on Delaware-street and one or two other fashionable avenues, he could turn neither to the right nor to the left without hearing the shriek of the whistle, the clatter of the steam-hammer, and the din of boiler riveting; without smelling and seeing the bituminous smoke and the steam; without encountering the grimy mechanic of the period. Large and small, there are the best part of one hundred foundries and factories devoted to the production of iron and iron manufactures; from the blast-furnace to the making of the most delicate piece of engine machinery; from a cooking-stove to a railroad bridge or a two thousand-ton vessel. Few people, not many even in Buffalo, have any idea of the extent of the Buffalo iron business. Like all other manufactures in this city, however, it is carried on under one very serious disadvantage. The banking accommodation of Buffalo is totally inadequate to its needs. The import, export, jobbing, manufacturing and local trade of Buffalo cannot be one whit less than two hundred million dollars, even if it be not more. To carry on this trade there are only eight banks, with an aggregate capital of $9,450,000. What is the consequence? The ruling rate of discount is from ten to thirteen per cent. per annum, with one per cent. exchange on New-York. What the small manufacturers have to pay for discount accommodation, Heaven only knows! But the evil does not rest there. While grain is rapidly arriving from the lake ports, the banks can easily employ all their resources, and turn their capital round once in every fifteen days. Think of that, ye New-York jobbers who grumble because your six months' bills are sometimes considered to have too long a time to run! At the best of times sixty days is the outside limit of credit here; and, in the Summer and Fall, none but firms of the highest standing can secure even that forbearance. A prominent citizen assured me this morning that the Buffalo manufacturers often apply for accommodation to a national bank in Batavia, forty miles away, of which he is a director; and that some of the larger firms sometimes get their money in New-York and Boston, and even in Rochester. The Buffalo banks are rapacious. They want all the pretty playthings—the big doit and all. They are not content with their own profit, but clutch eagerly at the profits of the manufacturer.

This inadequacy of capital reacts in a way which ought to open the eyes of capitalists. There are the Wadsworth Iron-works, which should be the glory and pride of Buffalo, a sad failure. Some time ago a car-wheel shop was opened. It lingered for a while and died from lack of nourishment. A few years back a great effort was made to introduce the boot and shoe trade on a respectable scale. Why, not? But, while this business in Rochester is growing yearly—nay, daily—as I told you in one of my previous letters, I am assured on reliable authority that not one of the shoe factories of Buffalo has been enlarged since they were started, and that the manufacturers are still struggling to hold their own—another symptom of this same holding back of capital. Though a city of 120,000 inhabitants, Buffalo does not boast a good hotel—at least, not in the modern acceptation of the term. The hotels are far behind the age; old fashioned and dreary. But there is some serious talk of supplying this deficiency. A few of the leading merchants have become convinced that business men are often driven out of the city by the lack of hotel comforts, and are raising among themselves a stock capital with which to build a first-class hotel. The "drummers" avoid Buffalo as though it were infested with cholera or small-pox, and hurry away as quickly as possible to more congenial quarters. "Where shall we go and stop over Sunday?" is a common remark among those whose business detains them in Buffalo. And this same Buffalo is a city only second in importance in the State to New-York!

Among business men the first question an inquisitive stranger is asked is "Have you seen the Wadsworth Iron-works?" I am not surprised. They far surpass any works of the kind that I have yet visited, and in some respects are superior to the great Cambria Works, at Johnstown in Penn., and the Phœnix Works. The Wadsworth Works stand on a small pear-shaped peninsula formed by the Buffalo Creek, and are about two miles from the city. They occupy fifty-four acres of land, though, of course, the land is not all covered with buildings. The works have been gradually growing for the last ten years. In 1860 CHARLES WADSWORTH, a son of the late Gen. WADSWORTH, of Genesee, who was killed in the war, and GERARD PALMER erected two blast-furnaces. They paid them so well that in 1861 EDWARD S. WARREN and A. POTTER THOMPSON erected one close by; and soon after, in the Winter of 1861, the four gentlemen combined their interests, and proceeded to put up one of the finest rolling-mills in the country. It is 600 feet long and 90 feet in width, but has, at different times, had five wings built out from it, the wings being 90 feet wide and varying from 50 to 200 feet in length. In 1866 the firm was converted into a joint stock company, and in 1869 Mr. WADSWORTH bought out all the stockholders and took sole charge of the works, then consisting of three blast-furnaces, one of a capacity of forty tons and two of thirty tons of pig-iron a day; a rolling-mill with five trains, including plate rollers, the roof of which had been destroyed by fire and had been replaced by an iron slated roof; two splendid machine-shops, and eighty-one tenement-houses for workmen. Up to this time the works and buildings had cost $1,500,000. And yet, in spite of owning one of the finest establishments in the country, Mr. WADSWORTH is hopelessly bankrupt, his property is in the hands of a receiver appointed by his creditors, to whom he assigned it, and the works, though still partially in operation, are for sale. Two items in Mr. WADSWORTH's accounts show pretty clearly where his money went. During the last two years he owned the works, he paid $76,000 and $88,000 respectively for discount accommodation. The banks only charged him eighteen per cent. per annum! The wonder is they did not run him into the ground years before. The firm of PRATT & Co. have leased one of the blast furnaces, and another is being worked by the receiver for the benefit of the creditors, and to their advantage. They would at one time have taken twenty cents on the dollar; now they would ask much more. The bonds on the works are over $700,000, and it is generally understood that the works may be bought to pay off the bonds and the interest due on them since May last. The works turn out rails, bar-iron in all sizes, plates, iron girders, beams and shapes for fire-proof buildings, and bridge iron. They can employ 1,000 men, and make 30,000 tons of pig-iron and 30,000 tons of manufactured iron. Their business capacity is about $2,000,000 to $4,000,000 a year, provided the thirty-two puddling furnaces and eighteen heating furnaces are kept at full work. Why, their pay-roll amounts to $10,000 a week, when in full blast! It seems sad to think that such splendid works should be in the market. The rolling-machines and engines are on a scale commensurate with the works. Two of the blast-furnaces have engines of 300 horse-power, and the third has one of 400 horse-power. Every train of rollers has its own direct-acting engine—three of 300 and two of 50 horse-power—and small engines are attached to all the shears, presses and saws. While I was at the works today, I saw them roll a beam for the New-York Post-office, the iron-work for which has been contracted for by the Kellogg Bridge Company. A large slab of iron was placed in the rollers, and in less than a minute was carried away in the shape of a beam 45 feet long, 15 inches deep, and weighing 3,000 pounds. These rollers have made nine-inch beams 60 feet in length. That such works can long remain under a cloud it is hard to believe. In these days of enterprise and millionaires, they will doubtless soon be forging ahead again.

On a portion of the Wadsworth estate stand the works of the Kellogg Bridge Company, already alluded to. They occupy four acres of land, and, although recently erected, are doing a very extensive business in bridges, viaducts and iron roofs. The Company have lately put up a splendid five-span bridge at Port Jervis for the Erie Railroad people, a bridge at Washington, and several bridges for the Maine Central Railroad. They have now on hand the contract for completing the iron work of your new Post-office, the firm who held the original contract having failed to fulfill it. All their work is done by very elaborate and costly machinery. The power of some of their punches and drills is wonderful. I saw the men making the eyes to those enormous bars of iron which are linked together and form the under trusses of bridges. As soon as the end of the bar (it is as big as a man's arm) is thoroughly heated in the furnace it is placed under the machine. The wheel revolves, a huge crank catches the heated end and turns it over as though it were a piece of whalebone. It is then welded by the blacksmiths and is ready for use. There is one machine in these works which was new to me—the cutter for shortening the beams when too long. The cutting is done when they are quite cold. The beam is placed in contact with a circular plate of iron with a flat edge, a quarter of an inch thick. It revolves 1,900 times in a minute, and cuts through a beam by sheer friction in about the same space of time. The works have connecting tracks with the Erie, Lake Shore and New-York Central Roads, in all one mile of railway, in addition to their water communication, the crack having a depth of water of fifteen feet. This gives them great transportation facilities, which, for their heavy productions are invaluable. The Company is already doing a business of $1,000,000 a year.

The largest private firm in the Buffalo iron trade is undoubtedly PRATT & Co., their blasting, manufacturing and jobbing business amounting to $4,000,000 a year. Their principal works, known as the Buffalo Iron and Nail Works, are located at Black Rock, three miles and a half from the city, within a short distance of the Niagara River, and in close proximity to the Erie Canal and the New-York Central Railroad. The works comprise rolling-mills, nail, spike and horse-shoe factories, and machine, blacksmith and forge shops. Some of them have been lately rebuilt; all have been again and again enlarged since Mr. PRATT began business, more than thirty years ago. At this moment an extensive shop is in course of erection, to be devoted solely to the manufacture of bridge-iron. PRATT & Co. own the Fletcher Blast Furnace, which was built in 1865, and from which they turn out 30,000 tons of pig-iron a year. They also lease one of the blast furnaces of the Wadsworth Works, where they make 30,000 tons more of pig-iron. In addition to selling all their own productions and manufacturing largely to order, they have an immense jobbing business in saddlery hardware, buying the bulk of their stock of the Buffalo Malleable Iron-works. Such an undertaking as this cannot be carried on without giving employment to a vast amount of labor. It is not surprising, then, to learn that they have between 1,000 and 1,100 men and boys in their employ. The treasurer of the works showed me the pay-roll. It is over $28,000 a month. Mind, this sum is for the works alone.

The works are of the most substantial character, and are furnished with every possible appurtenance and appliance for the manufacture of iron. Some of the machinery is very costly, and its workings fascinating to watch. One machine, a patent belonging to the firm, cuts iron into railroad fish-plates at the rate of fifteen tons a day. In one shop there are forty nail-cutting machines at work on one side, while on the other side there are twenty-eight small steam-hammers shaping horse-shoe nails from small round bars. The making of these nails is automatic; only requiring a man to feed the machine with the red-hot bars. In the rolling-mills they make any quantity of sheet-iron, from two to twenty-four inches wide, angle-iron, bridge and boat iron, wrought-iron riveted beams, girders and joists. It is difficult to say what they do not make. In this mill they have thirty-five puddling and heating furnaces, three trains of rollers including a universal or compound roller, four large steam-hammers, and sixteen steam-engines, of 2,500 to 3,000 horse power in the aggregate. The universal roller is a new invention for rolling plate-iron with true edges, so as not to require planing. This is done in a simple manner, by having two revolving upright rollers, which come in contact with the iron on either side as it passes through the horizontal rollers. There are, too, in this mill some very powerful cutters, punches, and warmers, for making screw-nuts, washers, boiler-rivets, bolts, &c.

About half a mile beyond these works are the malleable iron-works of PRATT & LETCHWORTH, in which Mr. PRATT is also largely interested. These works are only second in importance to two or three other establishments in the city, PRATT & LETCHWORTH being the largest manufacturers of saddlery hardware in the United States. They are located on a tract of land of thirty-eight acres, lying between the Central Railroad and the Scajaquada Creek, which runs into the canal immediately adjacent to the depot. The works, which are of great extent, (they give employment to five hundred men,) have been greatly added to, and for the most part reconstructed in the last few years. Every new appliance in molding, casting, malleating, and finishing, is brought into use in the works as soon as it is given to the world, and no expense is spared to sustain the high reputation of the goods manufactured there. The business is mainly confined to the making of saddlery hardware, rings, buckles, trees, hames, &c. The process of malleating is simple, though it is one requiring great care. The rings and buckles are cast in quantities, united together by a small connecting band which easily breaks off with the touch of a hammer. They are then carefully sorted, and all imperfect ones thrown aside. But the castings are brittle, and it is to render them tough and ductile that they are made malleable. They are tightly packed in an iron vessel in layers of oxyde of iron—the scale which flies from iron in the process of rolling—which has been allowed to oxydise, or become rusted by exposure, and are then subjected to the heat of the furnace for an average period of twelve days, according to circumstances. The combined action of the heat and the oxyde of iron produces the desired effect, and, after having gone through the revolving cylinder to take off any little roughness or attached particles, they are ready for the burnisher and the silver plater; even the band-plating and the electro-plating being carried on in the works. But there is one feature in the works which Mr. LETCHWORTH, the acting spirit of the concern, has very wisely introduced. The workmen are considered apart from their producing powers. It is intended to erect comfortable cottages for their especial occupation, with the rights of purchase of the house and lot, on the lands of the firm; a part of the unoccupied land has been planted and converted into a succession of flower gardens, that part nearest the water having, in Summer time, the appearance of a small park; and, lastly, a cozy little reading-room, well warmed, well lighted, and well supplied with newspapers has been opened for their use. A library will shortly be added to it. It would be a good thing if more large employers of labor were as thoughtful. The business store of the firm, which is adjoining that of PRATT & Co., on the terrace, is an emporium of such a countless number of articles that it is impossible to enumerate them. Suffice it to say that the saddler and harness-maker can more than fit himself out without stepping out of the store. Everything that is sold is, even when cheap, made of the best material and workmanship, no inferior goods whatever being kept in stock. The business of the firm extends all over the State of New-York, through the entire West to St. Paul and San Francisco, and South to New-Orleans. Orders from Europe, South America, and Mexico are not considered unusual.

The KING iron-works, on Ohio-street, are almost entirely devoted to the building of bridges and boats for the lake trade, and to the construction of marine engines, for which last they have a great name. They make some stationary engines, but they consider that quite a secondary part of their business, and yet, in my wanderings among the Buffalo iron-works, I saw several fine engines bearing the stamp of the firm. The works employ 300 men, and, as a matter of course, a vast amount of work is done in the shape of bridges for the New-York Central, Hudson River, Delaware and Hudson, and Oswego and Midland Railroads, all of which companies are their customers. They are now preparing to put up another bridge for the New-York Central over the Genesee River at Rochester, and the Common Council of the city are being pressed by the citizens to have the bridge made a double one, so as to use half of it for foot and carriage passengers. In 1871 Mr. KING built four fine iron steamers for Lake Erie, and is now at work on four more for the Ensign Company. When launched they will be the finest vessels afloat on the lake. Their tonnage is to be 2,000 tons each, and they will be provided with two compound engines, the cylinders of which will be 40 inches and 80 inches, with a 36-inch stroke in each engine. Two of these engines are completed, and are being put together in the erecting-room. They are splendid specimens of engineering skill, and would do honor to the work-shops of PENN & Co., of Greenwich, or MAUDSLAY & FIELD, of Lambeth, who are supposed to be the great English engine-builders. Mr. KING's business last year amounted to $1,400,000.

The stove foundry of JEWETT & ROOT is said to be the largest in the world. It is on—well, I hardly know what street to say. The works occupy the entire block bounded by Perry, Elk, Mississippi and Liberty streets, while the offices, stores, sample-rooms and yards occupy one-half, lengthways, of the block on the opposite side of Liberty-street. The great stove warehouse is 100 by 150 feet, and has seven floors, all, except the ground floor and sample floor, being piled with every description of stove. Their leading patterns (they have 250 distinct sets of patterns) are the Galaxy and Wild Rose, parlor-stoves, and the Hawkeye, Radiant, Signal, Pleader, Rubicon, Inland Empire, Redan and Legislator, cooking-stoves. But the two stoves on which they most pride themselves are the Chime Peals, a very elegant base-burning parlor-stove, and the Extension, a cooking-stove which seems to combine every possible desideratum that the most exacting chef de cuisine could wish for. The great feature in this cooking-stove, is that the galvanized reservoir which stands on the back of it can be removed at pleasure, and cooking carried on its place. There is also a "warming-closet" under the fire-box, and there are some special advantages in the arrangement of the oven, which is reversed. The foundry gives employment to 450 men, consumes from forty to forty-five tons of pig-iron every day, and turns out about 60,000 stoves a year. Fancy 60,000 stoves! Their aggregate heat would melt Mont Blanc into a snow-ball, and poor Switzerland would be so utterly drowned by the inundating waters in consequence that there would be nothing left for a Coroner's jury to sit upon; neither a rock, nor a goat's carcass. Jewett & Root stoves travel, or rather are shipped and "railroaded" all through the Western and North-western States. Many of them instill a charitable warmth into the freezing toes and fingers of the Saints at Salt Lake. May be that BRIGHAM, himself regales himself and his unwelcome legal guardian, with some "real old Mountain Dew," warmed on the hob of an "extension" stove, and so endeavors to dare any intruding nightmares which may presume to disturb his saintly rest. If, however, Mr. JEWETT really wants to do a high-minded, public-spirited thing, I would suggest his presenting a score or two of his stoves to the hotels in Buffalo. The visitors could not possibly be so wanting in common Christian gratitude as to fail to remember him in their prayers.

JOHN T. NOYE & SON have a flourishing and important business, in the way of manufacturing all sorts of flour-mill gearing, mill-stones, and iron water-wheels. It is really a grand sight to go into their foundry and see the casting of one of their immense turbine wheels. A short while ago they sent one out to Mexico which was forty-two feet in diameter. But a mill has wheels within wheels, and the number of castings it takes to complete the iron-work for a mill is as countless as the number of bald heads which the sarcastic barber said it took to make up one decent head of hair between them. The manufacture of the mill-stones is, of course, a leading feature of the business. They use none but what are called French burrs, which I believe are only to be found in the neighborhood of La Ferté, near Epernon, in France, and whence they are all imported. The burrs are not really stone. They are almost entirely composed of fossilized moss and leaves, with an admixture of granulated, flinty particles. This gives it its rasping texture, and makes it so valuable for flour-grinding. It, however, requires very nice workmanship; and it is the superiority of their workmanship that sends the mill-stones made by NOYE & SON through the country, to Mexico, South America and Europe, perhaps even back to Epernon. No wonder that NOYE & SON are doing a business of $800,000, and find employment for 350 hands. One thing about these mill-stones surprised me, and will, I think, surprise many others. They are in many pieces. The stones come from France in rough, unshaped blocks, and are worked into wedge-shaped pieces and fitted together like so many arch cap-stones, the interior, with the exception of the hole for the shaft, being filled in in patch-work style.

Out on Carolina-street, some distance from the centre of the city, is the threshing machine factory of JAMES BRAYLEY. Here everything again is on a large scale. Mr. BRAYLEY makes his own engines, his own boilers, his own castings, and all the iron-work of his machines. These threshing-machines have grown since they were born some five-and-twenty years ago. One of them would now fill a very large-sized room. Endless improvements, too, have been made, and the grain now leaves the machine ready for the elevator, at one part, the chaff at another, the straw at another, while the dust is blown away by revolving fans. Mr. BRAYLEY's machines are so constructed that they can be worked either by steam or horse-power. The demand for them through the grain-growing States is immense, and they are also exported. In 1871 Mr. BRAYLEY sold no less than 800 of them to Western farmers, the average price being about $600. He works his factory up to its full capacity, but at the end of last Fall was left with scarcely stock enough for his export trade. Opposite the works he has his lumber-yard, where he always keeps about 3,000,000 feet of lumber in stock, never using any wood in his machines till it has passed a seasoning novitiate of three years on his premises.

On the creek near the docks DAVID BELL has an iron foundry and ship-building yard. For thirty years he has been engaged in building marine engines, locomotives and iron boats; and some of the smartest revenue cutters now on the lakes were built for the Government by him. Mr. BELL is about laying the keels for two 1,700-ton vessels, which he hopes will make a considerable stir among shipping men.

But, if I continue to dilate on these Buffalo iron-works, I shall want a page or two of the TIMES. They are legion, and all of them more or less interesting. There are the Howard Works, for stationary engines; Dunbar & Howell, engines; Hubbie & Brother, stoves; L. & J. J. White, axes; Farrar & Trefts, engines; George W. Tift & Sons, engines; Frank & Co., wood-working machinery; the Franklin Foundry, of which Druillard & Hayes are the proprietors; the Buffalo Scale-works; Sutton Brothers, toy engines; C. T. Davenport, boilers, and many others. But I think I have told the readers of the TIMES sufficient to instill into their appreciative minds a very proper respect for the Buffalo Iron-works. A. S.

1.—THE DEBATABLE LAND BETWEEN THIS WORLD AND THE NEXT.—With Illustrative Narrations. By ROBERT DALE OWEN, author of "Footfalls on the Boundary of Another World." New-York: G. W. CARLETON & Co. 1872.

2.—REPORT ON SPIRITUALISM OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE LONDON DIALECTICAL SOCIETY, together with the evidence, oral and written, and a selection from the correspondence. London: LONGMANS, GREEN, READER & DYER. 1871.

Nearly a quarter of a century has passed since the phenomena known as the "Rochester Knockings," first awakened the wonder, the ridicule, and the incredulity of the world. Since that time the same or similar manifestations have occurred at various places throughout the United States and Europe, and, indeed, in all quarters of the globe. The phenomena have taken various forms, merging from the simple raps into moving articles of furniture, raising tables, pianos, &c., from the floor, the transmission of written messages, supposed to be from invisible intelligences, and the process of "levitation," said to be illustrated by Mr. D. D. HOME. Probably nothing has ever occurred among mankind that has been so persistently laughed at as this whole subject of so-called Spiritualism; and yet, if we are to believe Judge EDMONDS, there are no fewer than ten millions of Spiritualists in the United States alone. Mr. OWEN, while admitting that he has had less extended opportunities to make the calculation than Judge EDMONDS, places the number at 7,500,000. Before accepting either estimate as a basis on which to found any conclusions, we should like to know the precise definition attached by these gentlemen to the term "Spiritualist." Do they mean to include all who at any time have been interested in the phenomena? Do they include all who, having witnessed "manifestations," and been more or less impressed by them, are yet unable to believe them to be of supernatural origin? Or do they intend to convey the obvious significance, and have us know that by "Spiritualist" is meant a person who is persuaded that the manifestations referred to proceed substantially from the disembodied spirits of the dead, and who builds thereon a system of religious belief? Waiving this point for the time, we may admit that there is not the least doubt that a very large number of persons, chiefly in America and England, have been and are interested in the "phenomena," and do not believe they are to be accounted for by any known natural laws. Ridicule has not materially affected this state of things. The frequent discovery of imposture has not materially affected it. The denunciations of the pulpit, the scorn of men of science, the incessant battery of doubt, of exposure, and of explanation kept up through the Press has not materially affected it; and when we find, after the lapse of almost a generation, a learned society, in the largest civilized city of the world, deliberately appointing a committee to investigate and report upon the subject, it must certainly be admitted that the tenacity of believers is not without some colorable warrant. The mere fact that, at this late day, such an investigation should be made by such a body, is of great significance. The disturbances at Rochester began in March, 1848; yet, although the whole business has been, in the opinion of many, "exploded" over and over again; although the DAVENPORT brothers have been declared impudent jugglers, and HOME a crafty humbug; although FARADAY and HAMMOND have scouted and HUXLEY has scoffed, the London Dialectical Society orders an extended investigation, the Committee, consisting of thirty-six persons, devote themselves to the task for something like two years, and finally bring in a report which admits at least a highly important fraction of what most spiritualists claim. In order that our readers may judge of this statement for themselves, we append, in their own language, the conclusions to which this body, including five distinguished physicians, five civil engineers and mechanicians, a number of lawyers, bankers, and other hard-headed men of business, and several literary men of eminence accustomed to the exact expression of thought, have subscribed their names. The various reports of the subcommittees are printed in the book named above, and these, which substantially corroborate each other, are summarized by the General Committee in the subjoined propositions:

1. That sounds of a very varied character, apparently proceeding from articles of furniture, the floor and walls of the room,—the vibrations accompanying which sounds are often distinctly perceptible to the touch,—occur without being produced by muscular action or mechanical contrivance.

2. That movements of heavy bodies take place without mechanical contrivance of any kind, or adequate exertion of muscular force by the persons present, and frequently without contact or connection with any person.

3. That these sounds and movements often occur at the times and in the manner asked for by persons present, and, by means of a simple code of signals, answer questions and spell out coherent communications.

4. That the answers and communications thus obtained are, for the most part, of a commonplace character; but facts are sometimes correctly given which are only known to one of the persons present.

5. That the circumstances under which the phenomena are varied by the presence of prominent fact being that the presence of certain persons seems necessary to their occurrence, and that of others generally adverse; but this difference does not appear to depend upon any belief or disbelief concerning the phenomena.

6. That, nevertheless, the occurrence of the phenomena is not insured by the presence or absence of such persons respectively.

These are the general conclusions arrived at after the most protracted investigation yet undertaken in any organized manner; or, at all events, by any body of recognized scientific pretensions, and by so considerable a number of educated men acting in concert. We may now append some of the particular statements on which the conclusions depend. It appears, then, from the text of the report, that:

1. Thirteen witnesses state that they have seen heavy bodies—in some instances men—rise slowly in the air and remain there for some time without visible or tangible support.

2. Fourteen witnesses testify to having seen hands or figures, not appertaining to any human being, but life-like in appearance and mobility, which they touched or felt, sometimes allowing themselves to be grasped, and which they are therefore convinced were not the results of imposture or illusion.

3. Five witnesses state that they have been touched by some invisible agency, on various parts of their body and, often when requested, when the hands were present and visible.

4. Thirteen witnesses declare that they have heard musical pieces well played upon instruments not manipulated by any ascertainable agency.

5. Five witnesses state that they have seen red-hot coals applied to the hands or heads of several persons without producing pain or scorching; and three witnesses state that they have had the same experiment made upon themselves with the like immunity.

6. Eight witnesses state that they have received precise information through raps, writing and in other ways, the accuracy of which was unknown at the time to themselves or to any persons present, and which on subsequent inquiry was found to be correct.

7. One witness declares that he has received a precise and detailed statement, which, nevertheless, proved to be entirely false.

8. Three witnesses state that they have been present when drawings, both in pencil and colors, were produced in so short a time and under such conditions as to render human agency impossible.

9. Six witnesses declare that they have received information of future events, and that in some cases the hour and minute of their occurrence has been accurately foretold, days and even weeks before.

(As regards No. 5 some interest, if no additional weight, may attach to the fact that the present writer was assured last Summer by Mr. S. C. HALL that this experiment had been tried upon himself with perfect success by Mr. HOME, in the presence of many witnesses. Mr. HALL has a head of snow white hair, remarkable for its thickness. The red-hot coal was put on his head and left there, and was afterward taken off by Mr. HOME and restored to the grate. Mrs. HALL was present when this statement was made by her husband to the writer, and confirmed it in every particular. She observed that the fiery coal could be seen for some time shining through the hair, and there was not the least smell of burning.)

Besides these various statements, evidence is given in the report of trance-speaking, of healing, of automatic writing, of the introduction of flowers and fruits into closed rooms, of voices in the air, of visions in crystals and glasses and of the elongation of the human body. Incredible as these things undoubtedly appear, they are less marvelous than the experiments gravely recited by professed Spiritualists who have been investigating the subject for a much longer time; and we may as well observe here that the announcements of Mr. OWEN, in his new book, go far beyond those of the Committee of the Dialectical Society. Mr. OWEN declares, for example, that spirits do, in our own day, appear; that he has seen them; that, in the much-talked-of Livermore case, the visible spirit of a deceased person came, with more or less regularity, for a period of six years, and at three hundred and eighty-eight recorded sittings; and that there are plenty of living witnesses to bear testimony to this. We are bound to add that Mr. LIVERMORE, who is, as many readers know, a well-known New-York banker, affirms the correctness of Mr. OWEN's statements in a letter, which is printed and appended to the chapter describing them. This letter is so remarkable, and, in connection with what is given above, so pertinent, that we give it in full:

FIFTH-AVENUE, NEW-YORK, July 26, 1871.

MY ESTEEMED FRIEND: I cannot refuse your request for particulars of some of those experiences which I have read to you from my journal of 1861-66. In giving them I desire, by way of averting misconception, to make a few explanations.

I commenced these investigations an out-and-out skeptic. They were undertaken solely with a view to satisfy my own mind; and with no thought, motive or desire for publicity.

After thorough and careful scrutiny I found, to my surprise, that the phenomena were real. After ten years of experience, with ample opportunities for observation, (often with scientific men,) I arrive at these conclusions:

First—That there exists, in presence of certain sensitives of high nervous organization, a mysterious force, capable of moving ponderable bodies, and which exhibits intelligence.

For example: A pencil without contact with human hand, or other visible agency, apparently of its own volition, writes intelligently and answers questions pertinently.

Second—That temporary formations, material in structure and cognizable by the senses, are produced by the same influence; are animated by the same mysterious force, and pass off as incomprehensibly as they come.

For example: Hands which grasp with living power; flowers which emit perfume and can be handled; human forms, and parts of forms; recognizable faces; representations of clothing and the like.

Third—That this force and the resulting phenomena are developed in a greater or less degree, according to the physical and mental condition of the sensitive; and, in a measure, by atmospherical conditions.

Fourth—That the intelligence which governs this force is (under pure conditions) independent of and external to the minds of the sensitive and investigator.

For example: Questions unknown to either, sometimes in language unknown to either, are duly answered.

The origin of the phenomena is an open question.

You may rely on these records as being free from exaggeration, in each and every particular.

Very sincerely, your friend,

C. P. LIVERMORE.

Hon. ROBERT DALE OWEN.

In order that the reader may apprehend the precise nature of the phenomena whose existence is thus vouched for, it will be well for him to peruse the account of the first appearance of the apparition referred to, and we therefore append it in Mr. LIVERMORE's own language:

"No. 42, April 18, 1861.—Wind south-west. Weather fair. Having absolutely secured doors and windows, we sat in perfect quiet for half an hour, my faith becoming weak. Then we were startled by a tremendous rap on the heavy mahogany centre-table, which at the same time rose and fell. The door was violently shaken, the windows opened and shut; in fact, everything movable in the room seemed in motion. Questions were answered by loud knocks on the floors, on the glass of the windows, on the cell-discovery table.

Then an illuminated substance like gauze rose from the floor behind us, moved about the room and finally came in front of us. Vigorous electrical sounds were heard. The gauze-like substance assumed the form of a human head covered, the covering falling over one side of it. It touched me; then receded and again approached. I recognized an oblong substance, concave on the side that was presented to us, and in this cavity the light was brilliant. Into this I looked intently for a face, but none appeared. Again it receded and again approached; this time I perceived an eye. A third time it moved backward, accompanied by electrical sounds, and when, a third time, it came to me, the light had brightened, the gauze had changed in form; a female hand grasped it, concealing the lower part of a face; but the upper part was revealed; it was that of Estelle—eye, forehead and expression in perfection. The moment the emotion of recognition passed into my mind, it was acknowledged by a succession of quick raps from all parts of the room, as though an unseen audience expressed its applause.

The figure reappeared several times, the recognition becoming each time more nearly perfect. Afterward her head was laid upon mine, the hair falling over my face.

Miss FOX (whose hands I had secured during all this time) and I sat about ten feet from the wall of the room which faced us. The light moved to a point about midway between us and the wall; the electrical crackings increased; the wall was illuminated and brought out an entire female figure facing that side of the room, the light apparently in one of her hands. Instantly it was in sight fully half an hour and each movement was distinctly visible. Then came the message:

'Now see me rise.'

And immediately, in full brightness, the figure rose to the ceiling, remained there a few moments suspended; then gently descending, disappeared.

Afterward she showed herself between us and a mirror. The reflection of the figure in the glass was distinctly visible, the light being so bright as to show the veins in a marble slab beneath.

Here a heavy shower of rain fell, and there was spelled out: 'The atmosphere has changed. I cannot remain in form;' whereupon both light and figure finally disappeared."

* * * * * * *

So far, the upper part of the face only had been seen; but, after giving the details of various manifestations of apparently a phosphorescent character, Mr. LIVERMORE says: "At last a luminous globe which had remained stationary some six feet to my left floated in front, and came within two feet of me. It was violently agitated, crackling sounds were heard, and a figure became visible in its light. Then there was revealed—the full head and face of Estelle, every feature and lineament in perfection, spiritualized to shadowy beauty, such as no imagination can conceive or pen describe. In her hair, above the left temple, was a single white rose; the hair being apparently arranged with great care. The face and form faded and then became visible again at least twenty times; the perfection of reconstruction in each case being in proportion to the brilliancy of the light."

But, at this session, he, Mr. LIVERMORE, obtained other proof than that of sight to confirm the reality of the appearance. The head of the appearing figure rested for a time upon his, the luxuriant hair dropping over his face and into his hand. He says: "I held hold of the hair, which seemed to the touch at first identical with human hair; but, after a brief space, it melted away, leaving nothing in my grasp."

The character of Mr. LIVERMORE as a gentleman is well known in this community. He is regarded as a clear-headed and upright man of business. No eccentricity in word or deed has been, to our knowledge, ever alleged of him, and his physician, Dr. GRAY, writing to an English periodical in 1861, says of him: "Besides his general character for veracity and probity, Mr. LIVERMORE is a competent witness to the important facts he narrates, because he is not in any degree subject to the illusion and hallucinations which may be supposed to attach to the trance or ecstatic condition. I have known him from his very early manhood, and am his medical adviser. He is less liable to be misled by errors of his organs of sense than almost any man of my large circle of patients and acquaintance."

Mr. ROBERT DALE OWEN now comes forward with a volume of more than 500 pages, filled with all manner of corroborative and, for the most part, astounding statements, among which the experience of apparitions is verified personally by himself. In weighing the value of Mr. OWEN's testimony we should recollect that he is a gentleman of mature years and wide experience; that he has been engaged during the greater part of his life in active affairs, and has, by general admission, shown unusual sagacity; that he has been Minister of the United States to a foreign Power, was Military Agent during our late war for the State of Indiana, and subsequently, in conjunction with Judge HOLT, a United States Commissioner on Ordnance and Ordnance Stores. It must be allowed that there is evidence to show that Mr. OWEN is a shrewd, deliberate man of business, and that, in his case at least, profound convictions regarding Spiritualism do not unfit a person for the practical conduct of life. It is be said that he is rational on all other subjects but a monomaniac on this, what are we to say of the other witnesses who give concurrent and affirmatory testimony with himself? Are they, too, monomaniacs? And are the Committee of the Dialectical Society to be put down in the same category? It must, we apprehend, be conceded that were the subject any other than that of Spiritualism, the statements of the Committee, after their two years' researches, would be thought almost conclusive. At all events, they would be held by any judicial reasoner to outweigh any amount of contrary persuasion by superficial or non-investigating dissidents. The argument, however, in the case of Spiritualism, or rather the phenomena under consideration, is that what is reported to have happened is simply impossible; and that, consequently, it is not to be believed upon any testimony whatsoever. But, on the other hand, if these things are, in truth, impossible, it must be owned that the amount and character of testimony to the contrary is very astonishing, and that the delusion, if such it is, bids fair to become the most gigantic example of wide-spread hallucination ever known in the history of the race.

The instances cited above are of a wonderful and, as Spiritualists would, we suppose, themselves admit, of a highly-exceptional character. Such things, if the future is to be judged in any degree by the past, can only be seen by a privileged few; and, if only personal experience of such phenomena is to be accepted, as so many insist, in proof of them, the growth of belief would be slow. This is said not to be the fact, but it may be not unprofitable to set side by side with these marvels what may be relatively called a commonplace experience had in New-York within the past few days, and, for which, so far as the good faith of the witnesses is concerned, we are able to vouch.

On Thursday, Jan. 11, a lady started from the Fifth-avenue Hotel, to visit a friend close by Madison-avenue and Thirty-seventh-street. The lady is of middle age, remarkably robust and healthy, and of what would be called a practical rather than an imaginative turn of mind. She had not proceeded far when she felt a strong inclination to abandon her original purpose, and to visit Dr. S., a "medium" noted for the "physical manifestations" wrought in his presence. The lady describes herself to have resisted the impulse to go to Dr. S. She is not in the habit of visiting mediums, and had never seen this one. She, however, found the impression that she must go to him very powerful, and she accordingly struck off toward the western part of the City, and soon reached the medium's dwelling. He received her with some coolness, and intimated that he did not think a sitting would lead to satisfactory results. He felt impressed to the contrary. A conversation ensued of rather a chilling character, and the lady asked if he "positively refused" a séance. He answered "No," but said plainly that he saw his visitor distrusted him—she had declined to give him her name during the colloquy—and hence he feared a bootless effort. The sitting was, however, finally agreed upon, and with the following results: Dr. S. and his visitor sat at a small table, their chairs at right angles to each other. He put a crumb of slate-pencil on a common slate and held it under the table, inviting the lady to hold the slate with him. She did so, the other hands of medium and visitor being in contact on the table. Presently there was scratching on the slate. On withdrawing and looking at it, some unintelligible characters appeared. The lady, however, is willing to admit that upon this or a subsequent trial the initials of a much-loved and lately-deceased younger sister were traceable on the slate. This was again held under the table, and the experiment went on. The visitor now felt that her dress was suddenly twitched and smoothed down. This was done after the manner of lady friends, who will sometimes affectionately adjust each other's skirts. The action was many times repeated, both the medium's hands being in contact with those of the lady, and no other person to be seen. We should have observed that the visitor had most carefully examined the room, looked under the table, &c., before sitting down, and that the doors, both of which were in her view, were closed at the same time. The caressing action was now continued, but in a different way. The lady wore a close seal-skin sack or coat, and to her amazement she now felt hands, or what seemed to be hands, stroking gently down from her shoulders toward her wrists. She distinctly saw the fur fall and rise again in conformity with the passage of the invisible presence, and this occurred not once, but several times. Soon after she felt a tickling in her right hand—the one below the table—and looking at it, she saw that her spectacles, which had been in an inside left-hand pocket of her coat, which was closely buttoned up, had been taken out and put in her hand. The glasses were then thrown upon the floor as if were with anger, and the lady remembered that her sister particularly disliked them and wished her not to use them. The spectacles were replaced in the pocket, and their owner now watched with redoubled vigilance; but the extraordinary proceeding of taking them out and placing them, as before, in the lady's right hand was twice repeated. At the third time the spectacles afterward "leaped" from the hand and, describing a curve that must have been almost a complete circle, descended on the table. Soon after, again, a chair opposite the visitor, and at some distance from the medium, began to move. No living being was in contact with it, and no mechanical contrivance to effect its movement was in sight or appeared possible; yet the chair moved away from the table, as one puts back a chair one has been sitting in, and then returned to its former situation. There were some other trifling manifestations, and the sitting ended.

We have told this part of the story as briefly as possible, and with the knowledge that such scenes are said to be of constant recurrence. Indeed, Mr. OWEN's book itself is full of similar accounts. Our own narrative, however, has a special significance from what came directly after. The lady, then, with much particularity, related her interview with Dr. S. Now, it so happened that her brother-in-law had for a week past been under engagement to hold a sitting with a well-known medium. Mr. F., on this very Thursday night, at 8 o'clock. He did not mention this fact to the lady, but, having heard her story, proceeded to meet the engagement. It is proper to explain that this gentleman is not, any more than the lady, in the habit of consulting "mediums." To be explicit, he had not done such a thing before during seven years. On going to the house of Mr. F. the séance was had almost at once. The medium and visitor sat at right angles. Mr. F. first proposed that the other should write the names of some persons who had gone before, and whom he would like to consult. Five names were accordingly written on small bits of paper. The names were written with great rapidity, and it was made physically impossible for Mr. F. to see them while being written. The writer then folded the papers, as directed by Mr. F., into tight pellets, doubling and redoubling them many times. From the moment he began to write there were repeated knocks in various parts of the room, and these kept increasing while the five names were written. The spirits now answered in reply to Mr. F., and affirming their statements by raps, that they had come in the order they were asked for. Mr. F. rolled one of the paper pellets lightly between finger and thumb and asked if the spirit named on that paper were here. The answer "Yes" was instantly given, and as instantly Mr. F. named "ELIZA W. FARNHAM"—the name written on the paper—and threw the unopened pellet over to his visitor. This was done five times, and in no case was it possible for Mr. F. to see, with the physical eye, the name written on the paper. The visitor now asked a number of questions, to which replies were received of no very striking character, although some of them were certainly characteristic of the alleged senders. In the meantime, however, he wrote swiftly on a sheet of paper these questions:

1. Do you know what happens today?
2. Were the manifestations genuine?
3. What was taken, who took it, and where were they taken from?

This paper was now tightly rolled, like the others, and the responses came instantly. The two first questions were answered by raps in the affirmative. At the last Mr. F. paused, sighed, gave a peculiar smile, and said, "She is making me look at your eye-glasses." The moment after he wrote with great swiftness, "A. took the spectacles from C.'s pocket, and put them in her hand." [A. and C. are the Christian names of the two ladies.] Mr. F. continued, "It was done three times, and it was at Dr. S.'s." Further particulars of the interview at the house of Dr. S. were then accurately described, and it was stated among other things, that the information was throughout given, since at least two of the spirits now present were the active agents in what was previously done through Dr. S. in the afternoon. We submit this account, we repeat, not as more wonderful than others, but as a species of "cross-test" which has occurred within a few days, and of the particulars in which we have immediate personal knowledge.

It has been suggested that evidence as regards apparitions is limited, but we are aware that this statement will be contested. The celebrated Elder EVANS, of Mount Lebanon, told the writer that spirits were seen in numbers among the Shaker community, of which he is the head, years before the "Rochester Knockings" were heard of. This was repeated many times with emphasis and every token of profound conviction. Again, at this very time, it is declared that at Marvin, Cayuga County, N. Y., such appearances are seen constantly, and intelligent and respectable persons who have gone there for the purpose assert that their visits have proved successful, and that they have indeed seen and recognized the spirits of the departed. The great body of "manifestations," however, as gained through the ordinary mediums, are of much less startling character, and admit of wider speculation as to their meaning and causes. In other words, the resources of clairvoyance and biology may suggest explanations for the latter class of phenomena that would scarcely apply to the former.

We have dwelt upon the subject of the various manifestations at the expense, considering our limits, of some injustice to what we may call the more intellectual parts of Mr. OWEN's work; but we have not done so unadvisedly. Spiritualism, so called, must stand or fall by the phenomena. If these are proved impostures or delusions, it is idle to build up any scheme of religion or of sociology upon such rotten foundations. Therefore, in order to do justice so far as possible to the present stage of its progress, we have put together such evidence respecting "spiritual manifestations" as was at hand on the part of believers, and which is offered, with neither denial nor assent, for general consideration.

As regards "professional mediums," we fear the majority of them do sometimes deceive their visitors. The "mediums" are human; they get their living by their occupation; people are dissatisfied to pay their money and not get "manifestations," and the result is easy to see. If the raps or other phenomena come, well and good; then all is as it should be. But if they fail to come, the temptation is obviously strong for the medium to simulate their presence. When one is to understand that these phenomena, by all the accepted theories, are beyond the control of human volition, and that mediumship is a faculty totally disconnected with moral qualities, the basis of charlatanry becomes intelligible. Thus it has probably happened that some of the strongest and most celebrated "mediums" have not been altogether above suspicion, either in the practice of their mediumship or in the affairs of private life. Mr. OWEN would apparently rather not have any professional mediums at all, and it is doing him no more than justice on this and a cognate point to quote the following passages:

"Especially should the Spiritualist be on his guard against seeking worldly wealth and profit through spiritual revelations. The very attempt tends to attract spirits of a low order. The medium who submits to it incurs grave dangers; while the votary puts himself in the sure road to delusion and disappointment. A medium who is true to his high trust will refuse to enter a path thus perilous and delusive. If, sometimes when all human effort has failed, spiritual aid or advice in such matters is volunteered, it should, even then, be received with great caution. Money-changers are out of place in the spiritual temple. Man's destiny is to earn his bread by industry, not by divination.

Still another warning is greatly needed. The most experienced Spiritualists believe that no one, though actuated by the purest motives, can abandon himself to influences from the next world exclusively and throughout a long term of years, (for instance as SWEDENBORG did,) without risk of serious injury and without imminent danger of being, more or less frequently, misled. Secularism is lamentably in error when she teaches thus it is the part of wisdom to live here without taking thought of anything to fit ourselves for a hereafter; but, on the other hand, it is true that earth-life and its duties are an indispensable preparation for our next phase of being. Each world, like each age of man, has its own sphere with appropriate duties, to be fulfilled with reference the one to the other, but not to be confounded. If, in infancy, assuming certainty of manhood and its privileges, we neglect duties, and pursue what pertain to childhood, we shall suffer for it in our adult years; and it is doubtful whether any development in the next world can fully compensate for neglected opportunities of improvement and of usefulness in this. If, while here, we do not habitually avail ourselves of such opportunities, it may be assumed as certain that we shall die at last, like hermits after a barren life in the desert, utterly unfitted for our future home."

Mr. OWEN's avowed reason for entering upon the discussion of his theme is that it affords "phenomenal proof of a life to come." If we understand him he considers that at the time of the first appearance of the manifestations, human society was becoming sordid and material in a deplorable degree, and that the mission and purpose of spiritualism is to correct this by demonstrating the separate existence of the spirit and the truth of a future existence. The rapport between the two worlds is rendered possible by the intervention of some subtle essence akin to magnetism, doubtless, is being imponderable and operative by processes that may be manageable by the senses; and the conviction that this life is in reality merely an education for a better and higher existence is to spread far and wide for the instruction and elevation of mankind. No one is to feel discouraged because contempt and unbelief attend the development of the spiritual movement. This is inevitable in the nature of things. For some reasons it is even better that it should be so. Out of this kind of experience come the tenacity, the spirit of inquiry, the slow but sure stages of progress by which truth is assimilated and digested while it is demonstrated. No good thing, or great thing, in this world is ever accepted or believed in at once. Christianity was not, the existence of a Western Continent was not, the use and power of electricity or steam were not, and we are always to remember what HERSCHEL tells us, that "Occurrences which, according to received opinions, ought not to happen, are the facts which serve as clues to new discoveries."

Such is the general drift of Mr. OWEN's singular book, which, whether it produces conviction or not, is sure to be widely read. To many it will seem strange that what they will set down as a mere tissue of chimeras should receive even the latter attention; and this consideration has led us to gather and place side by side with some of his data similar matter from other sources. These things show that he is not alone in his persuasions, and are worth reflecting upon as a portion of the basis of a belief now undeniably shared by large numbers of people. We can only rightly measure the force and scope of a popular delusion by a candid examination of its sources; and this, in most cases, is best done by letting the advocates of a faith testify for themselves. If we give them a patient hearing, we shall not, at all events, be afterward accused of intolerance; and this is what we have striven to do. As regards the enormous improbability of the wonders we have related our readers must judge for themselves. Some great writer said that it would be truly astonishing if a ghost were really to appear; but that the assertion of a man that he saw one as he passed through a churchyard would certainly be much less surprising. These phenomena are totally opposed to the experience of the vast majority of mankind, and that they should be rejected as incredible by most intelligent persons is, consequently, to be expected. The simultaneous appearance in America and Europe of the two books we have discussed, with their singular correspondence in statements of phenomena and general testimony, will be likely, nevertheless, to stimulate fresh investigation, and may possibly lead, if not to more occult mysteries, to a knowledge of scientific truths unattained by man before.

OUR CHILDREN. Their Physical and Mental Development. By AUGUSTUS K. GARDNER, M. D. Hartford, Conn.: BELKNAP & BIRGE.

This is one of the most thorough and instructive books we have met with on this highly important subject; the author writes with a frank heartiness in his endeavor to show what the requirements for vigorous health actually are. There is notattempt to inculcate any peculiar regimen by which children would be obliged to live solely upon vegetable food, or pass half their lives in a bath; but the three grand necessities of exercise, cleanliness, and good living are recommended, and are applied to all the varying exigencies of child life.

A HAND-BOOK OF SILKS. By DR. LEWIS FEUCHTWANGER. New-York: L. W. FEUCHTWANGER.

Besides an infinite amount of information concerning the process of silk-making, the above-named work contains a number of practical observations on the best means of rendering wooden buildings fire-proof by the use either of soluble glass, or by silicification. In strengthening his statements the author draws facts from the burning of Chicago, which he holds would have been wholly prevented had the simple measures he suggests been universally adopted. The book is well worth reading from the great variety of information it contains.

SOPHOCLES. By CLINTON W. COLLINS, M. A. Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO.

This volume forms one of a series of translations from the works of Greek and Latin writers, known under the title of "Ancient Classics for English Readers." It contains a descriptive account, rather than a close translation, of the seven extant plays of SOPHOCLES, combined with considerable general information respecting the life of the poet, and the thoughts and feeling of the age in which he lived.

YOUTH'S SPEAKER. By GEORGE R. CATHCART, A. M. New-York and Chicago: IVISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.

This work is one of the best of its kind. It is made up not only of admirable selections from English prose and poetry, but also introduces a number of charming original pieces. Several dialogues, suitable for "Exhibition Day," are also added; and in the entire arrangement care has been taken to adapt whatever has been selected to the understanding of the younger pupils.

THE NEW-YORK OBSERVER YEAR-BOOK, 1872. SIDNEY E. MORSE, JR., & CO.

This work contains an immense amount of information, both of a general and religious character. It comprises all that is usually found in a very thorough almanac, and, in addition, furnishes general statistical facts concerning the Protestant churches of the country, with a list of the ministers connected with the various denominations, and their places of residence.

THE CHRONICLES OF GOTHAM. (Second Book.) New-York: G. W. CARLETON & CO.

This work, which is a continuation of the very popular New Gospel of Peace, carries the history of the principal political and social events of this City down to the breaking of the Ring. The points made are very forcible, and the entire work is exceedingly amusing.

LOGICAL TRAXIS. By HENRY N. DAY. New-Haven: CHARLES C. CHATFIELD.

An admirable text-book for those beginning the study of logic, and one that has the exceptional merit of being constructed in a strictly logical manner. For the purposes for which its author intended it, we can heartily recommend it.

SPEECHES ON POLITICAL QUESTIONS. By GEORGE W. JULIAN. New-York: HURD & HOUGHTON.

Mr. JULIAN was one of the earliest Congressional advocates of slave emancipation, and many of his addresses were made at a time of intense popular excitement. They are, in style and expression, exceedingly lucid and forcible.

MR. EDWARD FOX, a gentleman well known in journalistic circles as a yachting writer, purposes issuing a yachting annual on the 1st of May. This work will contain a list of all yacht clubs and their officers, all yachts belonging to recognized yacht clubs in the United States, colored plates of signals of yacht clubs, list of yacht-owners, and other matters of interest connected with yachting. The annual is published by subscription at the rate of $1 per copy.

MANILA PAPER.

How the Manufacturers Propose to Decrease the Supply—What the Producers and Dealers Say of the Latest "Ring."

The end of "Rings" does not yet seem to be at hand. Now that the most audacious and unscrupulous political "Ring" that the world ever knew has been broken forever, and the boldest and most law-defying of the railroad combinations of modern times has been crippled, we find the spirit of arbitrary monopoly haunting the avenues of trade, and one of our most important interests threatened with "Ring" manipulation, with all its evil consequences to trade in general and suffering among the working classes.

The combination referred to has been effected among the manufacturers of Manila paper. These operators, it is said, use as a plea for their contemplated action, the fact that the drought of 1869 occasioned a decreased production at the mills which the increased production of 1870 was not able, with the short water supply in the reservoirs, to make up. Another reason that will be assigned for lessening the supply in market, it is reported, is that of increased cost of production.

Among the dealers it is generally understood that the project will be carried out by the manufacturers during the Spring and Summer, and the way it will be done, it is said, is this: Pure Manila paper is manufactured from Manila rope, and is used for bags by grocers for putting up flour, sugar, coffee, tea, &c. The demand for this paper has grown enormously within a few years, and the combination to affect its price does not extend to any other branch of the paper trade.

The mill-owners engaged in the manufacture have formed themselves into an association, and their avowed intention is, it is said, if they have not done so already, to pledge themselves not to send no paper to market until consumers manifest an eagerness to purchase, thus creating a demand, and a consequent large margin of profit. In trade a very general impression prevails that the project will be carried out, as has been found upon inquiry.

A reporter of the TIMES called upon several leading firms in the paper trade to learn their views on the question, and the first one said that the combination had really been made, although the necessity for an increase of profit does not exist, as the operations of production have been augmented since the scarcity which existed by reason of the drought of the Summer and Autumn of 1869, by the erection of new mills, and the cost of the raw material is now much lower than for some time past. The operators propose to make very heavy profits by their cheap purchases, and yet by the high scale of prices they fix for the manufactured article. Instead of advancing, he said they should reduce their prices. These monopolists met in this City some time ago and agreed to advance prices about seven per cent, giving as a pretext the deficient supply of water at the mills, occasioned by the drought referred to above. But a number of large mills were put in operation, and several owners who had not before done so gave their attention to the manufacture of this class of paper, in view of the prospective profits to be made. Thus, with the increased water supply, defeated the plan and removed the excuse for an increase of prices, if it ever fairly existed. The plan now, the gentleman said, is to decrease the working hours of the operatives so that the mills shall lie idle at night. Thus, notwithstanding the heavy mill expenses will be the sufferers, the object sought, the scarcity of stock in the market, will be effected, and the seeming necessity for an advance will follow.

The same firm stigmatize this movement as grossly arbitrary, without a shadow of reason or justice, because the Gorrmond cost of the raw material has reduced the remuneration of the producers greater now than heretofore.

It is by no means certain, however, that the combination will succeed. Six new mills have been started, one of which, located near Lawrence, Mass., is said to be capable of producing nearly four tons a day—almost double the amount usually made. A mill at Lee, Mass., has been greatly enlarged, and is now enabled to produce nearly as great an amount, and still another, now being erected at Derby, Conn., will, when completed, be equal to a production of three tons a day.

A QUESTIONABLE CHARITY.

"The New-York Juvenile Guardian Society"—$10,000 a Year from the Legislature—Had Tammany Anything to do With It?—Suspicious Brothers—An Investigation Needed.

The above-named organization has been in existence in this City for a number of years and claims to be one of the numerous societies for ameliorating the condition of the thousands of poor children who throng the streets. It bases its claims upon a number of schools started at different periods in the different tenement quarters of the City, but neglects to state that not one of these schools has ever been maintained for any length of time. At present, it has only two schools in operation, one at No. 207 Bowery, and the other at No. 101 St. Mark's-place. For the past three years the Society has been the recipient of $10,000 yearly from the State, and about $12,000 from other sources. It purports to be under the direction of a Board of Directors composed of a number of prominent citizens, who, it is safe to state, know but very little of its management. It also claims to be indorsed by a number of well-known gentlemen, among whom are the following: James

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 26.—The question as to when the present session of Congress shall terminate was unexpectedly and gratifyingly decided in the Senate today. The scenes amid which the decision was reached were both painful and laughable. The Apportionment bill had apparently all but reached a vote when Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, indicated his intention to make a speech. This caused it to be laid aside, and Mr MORTON obtained consent to take up his adjournment resolution, which had been up during the morning hour. Considerable desultory debate followed, the Senate being in an impatient mood. About the only man in earnest, so far as opposition was concerned, was Mr. SUMNER. Mr. THURMAN, in order to test the sense of the Senate, moved to lay the resolution on the table, which was lost—yeas 16, nays 32—Messrs. FENTON, SHERMAN, SPRAGUE, SHURZ, SUMNER and TRUMBULL, of the Republicans, voting yea. Mr. SHURZ had already offered an amendment not to adjourn until the Tax and Tariff bills had been acted on. This was lost—yeas 18, nays 36—Messrs. SHURZ, SUMNER and TRUMBULL, of the Republicans, voting yea. Mr. SUMNER then, in quick succession, moved two amendments, first, that his Civil Rights bill should not be jeopardized by fixing a time for adjournment, and second, that no adjournment should be had until a measure for specie payments had been provided. Both were voted down without a division. Mr. SUMNER then quickly offered a substitute in the nature of a wordy whereas and resolution reciting the necessity of justice before generosity, and indorsing the righteousness of the Civil Rights bill and declaring the inexpediency of an adjournment before such a conciliatory measure was enacted. Then with considerable dramatic effect, Mr. SUMNER announced that he stood alone in this demand, under which declaration his colleague, Mr. WILSON, winced very decidedly, and an undertone explanation followed, which induced Mr. SUMNER to say that he hoped he was—not alone. Mr. WILSON voted for adjournment under the conviction of its desirability, and for that Mr. SUMNER put him in the catalogue of those who would defeat civil rights. By this time Mr. SUMNER seemed decidedly alone. The Democrats could not accept his indorsement of civil rights, and as the roll-call on this substitute went on it seemed as if he would again reap that peculiar Sumnerian glory of standing single-handed "as the champion and defender of an oppressed race." But as the call approached the end, SPENCER and TIPTON, either through a malicious intention of depriving SUMNER of his martyr-like solitude, or because of their ambition to have their names appear with his, voted in the affirmative, amid suppressed laughter. The substitute was voted down—yeas 11, nays 4. The resolution was then agreed to—yeas 36, nays 12. The only Republicans voting nay being Messrs. SUMNER, SPRAGUE and SHERMAN, Messrs. FENTON, SCHURZ and TRUMBULL dodging the question. The resolution fixes Wednesday, the 29th of May, as the day for adjournment, and will unquestionably be passed by the House on Monday, as that body is always ready to fix an adjournment day, while the Senate usually has not been willing to do so until the last moment. The passage of this resolution by the House will put it in the power of that body to hold the Senate to its agreement, or to take such terms, if an extension becomes necessary, as the House may dictate.

APPROPRIATIONS.

Seldom, if ever, has greater celerity been manifested by the House in the disposition of Appropriation bills than has been exhibited in the passage of the Legislative, Executive and Judicial, and the Pension bills, both of which were completed in the House today. The bills show evidence of having been very carefully prepared, and as the amounts are generally reduced, as compared with last year, the House seems willing to accept most of the Committee's recommendations without question. Probably no bill will occasion any serious discussion, save the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, or "Omnibus bill," which comes in last. The spirit of economy is abroad, and the House is very watchful.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

The hearing of the representatives of the steam-ship lines who are competing for the foreign mails took place today before a joint meeting of the two Committees of Commerce of the Senate and House. The Cunard line was represented by CHAS. G. FRANCKLYN, and the Williams & Guion line by JNO. S. WILLIAMS, ABRAM WAKEMAN, and J. S. OAKFORD. The Cunard line rested their case upon the superiority of their vessels in point of speed and equipment. The Williams & Guion line pressed their claims upon the ground of their attitude toward the Government in its emergency, two years ago, the constant improvement they were making in the character of their vessels, and the fact that as the nearest approach to an American line they deserved encouragement and patronage. They assured the Committees that within the year they would be fully equal in point of speed to any line on the ocean. They now have near completion two vessels equal to anything afloat, one of which will be launched in April. After the hearing, the Committees in a very brief deliberation unanimously decided in favor of recommending to the Postmaster-General that the contract be continued with Messrs. WILLIAMS & GUION.

"JEFF." DAVIS A TANNER.

A curious fact has come to light here concerning Mr. JEFFERSON DAVIS. Evidence has been found to be in existence that, instead of being born in Kentucky, as has always been supposed, and as he has always asserted, he was really born in Massachusetts, and therefore, instead of being a pure-blooded son of Southern chivalry, he is only a Massachusetts Yankee. LAPHAM'S Dictionary of Congress puts DAVIS down rather indefinitely as having been born in Christian County, Kentucky, in 1808. Persons who claim to be well informed say that "Jeff" was born in old Stockbridge, Mass., in 1808, and removed to Kentucky with his father, when a small child. His father is said to have been a wheelwright by trade, and the house where he lived on one side of the road, and the shop where he worked on the other side, are well remembered by living witnesses. After all, the illusions rebel comes from plebeian stock.

THE APPORTIONMENT OR REPRESENTATION.

The discussion of the Apportionment bill in the Senate today developed opposition to several features of the bill outside of the section which fixes the number of Representatives to which each State shall be entitled. Mr. SHERMAN opposed the Senate bill because it would force Ohio either to redistrict the State, which in the present political complexion of her Legislature, it proved be almost impossible to do, or to go without any representation at all in the next Congress. The third section of the bill, which fixes the Tuesday following the first Monday in November as the day for the election of Representatives in all the States, was opposed by several Senators on the ground that their States would have to have extra sessions of their Legislatures called in order to make it possible for them to comply with the requirements of the law in electing Representatives to the next Congress. Mr. MORRILL thought the section relative to the admission of new States hereafter was improper, and he would move to strike it out. What will be the final fate of the measure cannot be predicted.

PERMATURE.

The credentials of the Senator elect from Iowa, Mr. ALLISON, who is to succeed Mr. HARLAN as the expiration of his term, were presented in the Senate today by Senator WRIGHT. The document was properly pigeon-holed to await the meeting of the Forty-third Congress.

A MACHINE WITH BRAINS.

The Census Office has now a large force employed in tabulating the age and sex schedules. A tallying machine, of which mention was some time ago made, invented by Mr. C. W. SEATON, lately in the Census Office, but now Chief Clerk of the Pension Bureau, has been found to be of great service in this work, and has been gradually introduced till nearly 100 are now in operation. Daily records of work are kept, and it appears that with the machines twice the amount is accomplished by the same number of clerks that can be done without them. Yesterday in one of the divisions 109,000 names were tallied by forty-five men with the machines, and some of the men were operating them for the first time. The machine is very simple and inexpensive, and will advance the completion of the census work by several months.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

NOMINATIONS.

The President sent the following nominations to the Senate today:

William Y. Gilmore, Receiver of Public Moneys at Chillicothe, Ohio; Joshua W. Gilbert, United States Marshal for the Southern District of Florida; Amos Merrill, District Judge of the Eastern District of Texas, instead of William S. Goddard, whose nomination is withdrawn.

PILOTAGE AT NEW-YORK.

The original jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court was today invoked to issue a writ of prohibition to the Judge of the District Court for the Eastern District of New-York, to restrain his entertaining jurisdiction of certain cases brought under the New-York Pilot laws by legalized pilots to recover half pilotage, they having offered their services, which were refused by the vessels to which they were offered. The ground upon which the motion is based is, that the half pilotage laws of the State are clearly a regulation of commerce, and, as such, a violation of the Federal Constitution, and void. The States have no power without the sanction of Congress, to pass such laws, and Congress has no power to authorize the States to pass them, and all laws attempting to authorize such legislation by the States, are void. The cases are Nos. 7 and 8, original ex parte McNEIL, and of ex parte Saul CHARLES DONOHUE makes the motion.

INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has given instructions to Supervisors throughout the country, to cause a reduction to the lowest practical standard, of the clerical force in the offices of Assessors.

RICE AND LEATHER.

The Committee of Ways and Means today continued the hearing of persons interested in rice, among them JOHN F. TALLMADGE, of New-York, and Senator NORWOOD, of Georgia. The Committee next heard a delegation representing the leather interest, the delegation comprising large interests in Massachusetts, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland. They pay iron $14 to $17 for common, and $21 a ton for skilled labor, while the same goods are made in France and Germany, with labor at from $4 for unskilled to $6 for skilled labor a week. It is against the cheap European labor they want to be protected.

FORTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Friday, Jan. 26

Mr. WRIGHT presented the credentials of Senator-elect WILLIAM B. ALLISON, of Iowa.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The resolution to adjourn finally on the 29th of May was taken up, in opposition to Mr. SUMNER and Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. SCHURZ modified his pending amendment so as to enact only that Congress "shall not adjourn without passing a law for the reform of the civil service," and argued that its rejection would indicate that the Senate did not care about the reform of the civil service. It was lost by 22 to 16. Mr. SUMNER's amendment that no adjournment shall take place until after the passage of his Supplementary Civil Rights bill, was the pending feature, and Mr. TRUMBULL moved to amend it by adding, "nor until the Senate shall have come to a vote upon the bill from the House of Representatives to repeal the duty on coal." Mr. SUMNER then asked Mr. MORRILL to state his reason for urging this bill. Mr. MORRILL declined to debate the question, but said it was clear the Senate desired the passage of the bill, and added that there was ample time to transact all the important business of the session before the day proposed for adjournment. Mr. SUMNER then read from a speech of Mr. MORTON in May, 1870, in which adjourning finally July 4, and exhausted the morning hour.

APPORTIONMENT.

Mr. TRUMBULL called up the regular order, this Apportionment bill, and, having the floor, refused to give way to Mr. MORTON to move the postponement of all other business for the adjournment resolution, and proceeded to address the Senate, explaining the amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. The only States that would lose members were Vermont and New-Hampshire. This was no new matter; New-York once had forty, Virginia twenty-three, and Massachusetts twenty members. The Committee, he said, concluded the number of Representatives should remain as the present figures. Mr. THURMAN thought the House bill was as nearly perfect as was possible. Besides, he urged, each House, under the Constitution, was the judge of the qualifications of its own members, and although the bill did not come directly under that provision, by the courtesy always existing between the two Houses each had been left to regulate its own organization. Mr. EDMUNDS said the House bill would give Ohio ten times as many members as Vermont, while her population was only eight times as great, which was unconstitutional. Mr. MORTON advocated a House of at least 300 members. He thought the House bill fairer than the Senate substitute. The adoption of the Senate bill would cost the Republican Party twenty-two electoral votes in the next election. The debate was continued by Messrs. PATTERSON and THURMAN, when Mr. EDMUNDS moved to amend the substitute so as to make the whole number of members 300, which was lost—16 to 31. Mr. MORTON moved to strike out the fifth section, which provies that no new States shall be admitted, until they have a certain population. Mr. MORRILL arose to speak, but yielded the floor temporarily, and after some discussion the bill was made the special order for 10-morrow, the vote to be taken at 4 o'clock.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT AGAIN.

Mr. MORTON then again called up the resolution for a final adjournment on the 29th of May. Mr. SUMNER argued against any adjournment until the necessary laws shall have been passed for the protection of the colored people. Mr. TRUMBULL's amendment, providing that Congress shall not adjourn without repealing the income tax, was then rejected—yeas 14, nays 27. Mr. SCHURZ offered an amendment providing that there should be no final adjournment till after the passage of laws for the reduction of the tariff and internal taxation, and said that Mr. MORTON had been convicted out of his own mouth. He had shown that it is impolitic, improper and unpatriotic to provide so early for an adjournment when great subjects remained to be considered. Mr. MORTON declined to make any reply to Mr. SCHURZ. Mr. TRUMBULL said his only desire was that Congress should not adjourn without having done the business requisite of it—the expected reduction of the tariff and the revenue. He said while it was held that the tariff had been reduced, the revenue had increased, and he understood the estimates for the present year would show the largest Customs collections in the history of the country. The internal revenue system needed simplifying also. Mr. MORRILL favored the resolution as a suggestion to the House that the Senate desired an early adjournment. Mr. THURMAN said if the majority were resolved on passing the measure he saw no object in protracting the debate. The question was called, and Mr. SCHURZ's amendment was lost by yeas 23, nays 26. Mr. SUMNER's amendment, relating to the Civil Rights bill, received only his own vote. Mr. SUMNER offered another amendment, that legislation to promote a return to specie payments shall first be made, which was lost. He then renewed his Civil Rights amendment in another form, and a scene followed.

Mr. HAMLIN—Mr. President, this is a very important and solemn amendment; and as we ought not to vote upon it without great deliberation, I ask the Senator from Maine (Mr. HAMLIN) had better load off. Sir, I do not believe that the right of the colored people of this country ought to be trifled with in this Chamber. There is a time that they can sing—at the ballot-box.

Mr. CAMERON—They can't sing it after the 29th of May. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER—I do know that. I plead for the absent, the disabled, the insulted. I am alone; I hope I shall not always be so, but I have been alone in other days. I make this sincere effort to press upon the Senate its duty. I could not do otherwise without feeling that I had neglected a duty.

Mr. CONKLING—Question!

The amendment was rejected by a vote of 41 to 4, only Messrs. EDM. STOCKTON, SUMNER and TIPTON voting in the affirmative. The resolution, unamended, was then passed by a vote of 36 to 12, Messrs. Sherman, Sumner, Tipton, Sprague and Schurz being the only Republicans who voted against it. The Senate, after an Executive Session, adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Petitions were presented from EDWARD QUITTARD, Dr. H. MARMADUKE and others, officers of savings banks, for a repeal of the tax of one-half per cent, as being a tax upon the mechanics and working men of the country; of the employes of GREGORY & Co., Jersey City, N. J., against a change of the existing Tariff laws, abating or abolishing duties upon such articles as are successfully produced in this country; of ALLEN REYNOLDS & Co. and others, of Paterson, N. J., for a uniform tax of sixteen cents per pound on all descriptions of manufactured tobacco.

A CURIOUS PENSIONER.

This being private bill day, a large number of pension bills were presented and passed. One of them was reconsidered on motion of Mr. COX, and the proposed pensioner, ADAM CORRELL, of Ohio, was denounced by Mr. CROSSLAND as a robber, out-throat, and a thief, who had hung around the skirts of the Union Army. After that denunciation the bill was recommitted.

THE CIVIL APPROPRIATION AND PENSION BILL.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Civil Appropriation bill. A proviso was added to the item which appropriates $400,000 to pay judgments of the Court of Claims, directing that no part of the amount should be paid on any judgment rendered in favor of GEORGE CHAFFERNING growing out of any service rendered in carrying the mails. The last section of the bill, which directs that no claim shall be considered or paid by the Government unless filed within seven years from the time the claim occurred, was stricken out. An amendment intended to put some restriction on the public printing, was adopted, after a debate in which attention was called to the extravagant expenditure in printing the Geological Survey of the Yellowstone Parallel, each volume of which must cost $25. It was suggested, on the other hand, that the objection to this expenditure should properly have been made when the expenditure was ordered. The amendment was agreed to, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House. The amount appropriated by it is about $1,700,000, under the following heads:

Pay and mileage and expenses of the Senate, $60,000; pay and mileage and expenses of the House of Representatives, $1,400,000; Capitol Police, $50,000; Public printing, $2,007,000; Library of Congress, $37,000; Executive, $22,000; Department of State, $128,000; Mexican, Spanish and British Commissions, $64,000; Treasury Department, $2,871,000; For Independent Treasury, $65,000; Collection of Internal Revenue, $9,500,000; Mint and Assay Offices, $231,000; Territories and District of Columbia, $190,000; Interior Department, $1,190,000; Department of Agriculture, $164,000; Bureau of Education, $64,000; Patent Office receipts, balance, &c., $112,000; War Department, salaries, &c., $800,000; Navy Department, salaries, &c., $132,000; United States Courts, &c., $375,000; Court of Claims and Judgment, $421,000; Department of Justice, $1,000,000.

The Pension bill, appropriating $30,480,000, was also disposed of, and the Committee then rose and reported both bills to the House, and they were passed, with the understanding that to-morrow's shall be for general debate. The House at 5:20 P. M. adjourned.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 26.—The Associated Press report of the so-called Liberal Republican Convention, at Jefferson City, on the 24th, was a gross exaggeration of the importance of the whole affair. The meeting was simply a mass-meeting, without delegate representation, and there were no prominent or leading men of this State, now known and regarded as Republicans, who were engaged in it. The Republicans of this city feel greatly outraged at the character of the reports sent out.

The Wood Will Case—The Estate Valued at Upward of Half a Million Dollars.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., Jan. 26.—A contested will case, involving property to the amount of more than $600,000, is on trial before the Superior Court, now in session in this city. From the social stand of the parties, and the large amount at stake, unusual interest is felt in the case, and the Court-room is crowded daily with interested spectators. The suit is brought by the widow of the late NATHANIEL WEED, of Darien, Conn., against the executors of her husband's estate, upon the ground that he was of unsound mind at the time the will was made. By this document Mrs. WEED, (who was the testator's second wife,) is made the recipient of an annual income of $6,000, and is given the use of the homestead, the furniture, &c., during her natural life, the bulk of the property being left to Mr. WEED's son by a former marriage, and at his death to the grandchildren of the testator. Eminent counsel have been retained on both sides, the plaintiff's attorneys being Messrs. OLMSTEAD, of Stamford, and TILTON E. DOOLITTLE, of New-Haven. For the defense are Hons. SIDNEY E. BEARDSLEY, of Bridgeport, and CALVIN E. CHILDS, of Stamford, (United States District Attorney.) The trial of the case has already occupied five weeks, and shows no prospect of coming to a speedy termination.

This case was tried last October, and the jury failed to agree. Only five jurors were obtained today from a list of 130. Two hundred and fifty talesmen were drawn to appear here on Monday next, to which time the Court adjourned. The jurors were allowed to go to their homes unattended.

Revival of an Ancient Law of Twenty-Five Years Ago—Hypocritical Members Swindling Their Constituents—Short-Lived Resolve to Work Steadily.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, Jan. 26, 1872.

The Twombly substitute, as amended in the Senate by striking out the name of Gen. COCHRANE as one of the Board of Audit, came down to the Assembly for concurrence this morning, and gave rise to another long debate. The friends of the bill as it originally passed the Assembly were somewhat taken aback to see some of the leading advocates of the Hawkins bill now taking sides with the Twombly substitute, at least so far as to oppose the amendment striking out the name of Gen. COCHRANE. Mr. JUDD led off in the opposition, and claimed that if we were to have a Board of Audit, which he thought wholly unnecessary, there was no good ground for striking out the name of Gen. COCHRANE, who was as good a Republican as Mr. VAN NORT, who was left in. He could not see the consistency of those who advocated the Twombly substitute from a party point of view, now favoring an amendment that left the Board in the control of Democrats. He also called attention to a serious defect in the bill, which its friends had probably overlooked. They had appropriated eight and a half millions of dollars to pay claims for which Mr. GREEN only asked four and a half millions. By the second section of the bill payments would be confined to claims and liabilities, including salaries accruing prior to the 1st of January instant, and although the bill contemplated payments up to May 1, yet it appropriated no money with which to make any payments beyond the beginning of the year. He said that great efforts had been made by Democratic journals to represent the contest on this bill as a split of the Republican Party in the Legislature, and as a victory for one faction of the party. No such considerations entered into his mind or that of his friends in supporting the Hawkins bill in preference to the one new before the House. He voted conscientiously, and as his judgment dictated, and he presumed those who voted on the other side did the same. But since it had been decided to constitute a Board of Audit to settle these claims, he could not see the reason for striking out the name of one Republican and leaving the other in, and should therefore vote against concurring in the Senate amendment. The discussion was continued by Messrs. Alberger, Miles, Moulton, Vedder, Smythe, Fort, Alvord, Hawkins, and others, and the whole ground was gone over again with regard to the merits of the Hawkins and Twombly bills, and the absurdity of mixing up party considerations in discussing them. Mr. JACOBS said he wished to correct a misapprehension that appeared to exist on both sides, and that was that the bill, as amended by the Senate, would leave the Board of Audit two Democrats to one Republican. He said that Mr. STEBBINS, the President of the Park Commission, was not a Democrat, whatever Mr. GREEN might be. He left the Democratic Party ten years ago, having resigned his seat in Congress on the express ground that he could no longer act with the party that elected him, (the Democratic,) and having ever since acted with the Republicans. The vote was finally taken on the motion to concur, and carried by 68 to 39—one more than enough to pass it. It will doubtless be signed by the Governor today.

THE INSURANCE INVESTIGATION.

The testimony before the Insurance Committee, last evening, relative to the printing for Superintendent MILLER's Department creates quite a sensation here. MILLER would fain have people believe that he knew nothing about the transaction of SOUTHWICK, whereby WEED, PARSONS & Co. agreed to pay twenty-five per cent. of the printing bills to a third party in order to retain the printing of the Department, but, as an Albany Democrat remarked today, if MILLER was green enough or stupid enough to permit such a bargain to be made without his getting his "rake," he ought to leave the Democratic Party forthwith. The Insurance Committee will go to New-York to take testimony before they get through, and will subpœna a few insurance offices to testify as to MILLER's fees for examining into their affairs. The probability is that the Committee will report, as the result of their investigation, a bill abolishing MILLER's office as a distinct Department of the State Government. If not, his powers will be largely curtailed, particularly in the matter of examinations.

SENATE PROCEEDINGS.

The Senate was occupied during the greater part of the morning in the consideration of the Assembly bill fixing the number and compensation of employes of the two Houses. Mr. D. P. WOOD, Chairman of the Finance Committee, stated that if the bill became a law the aggregate of all expenses of the character provided for in it would be $76,100, whereas the same class of expenditures last year reached the sum of $145,000 and upward, thus effecting a saving of $64,000. He showed, in a forcible manner, how utterly reckless the Democratic Legislatures of the past ten years had been in the matter of multiplying useless offices, and voting gratuities and increased salaries to their employes. Mr. HARDENBERGH, Democrat, attempted to reply to these damaging statements. He said the extravagance mentioned included extra compensation voted at the close of the session, and there was no reason to suppose that the same thing would not occur at the close of this session. Mr. HARDENBERGH, in a half jocose vein, denounced the spirit of pleasure economy which was manifested by some Senators, and said that if the employes of the Legislature were paid starvation wages, they were almost justified, by the law of self-preservation, in stealing. Mr. WOODIN, Republican, replied with much force that the law of self-preservation was not applicable to the cases of men who flocked here from all parts of the State importuning members for their appointment, knowing a priori that what pay was attached for them; if it was not sufficient to maintain them they had the privilege of stopping at home. Mr. WOOD called attention to the provisions of the bill, which expressly forbade any extra compensation to any officer or employe. A motion was made and adopted to increase the per diem of the Sergeant-at-Arms and his assistant the Door-keeper and assistants, the Librarian, assistant Librarian and Postmaster to $6, instead of $5. The bill then passed 28 to 1, and was sent at once to the Assembly, which concurred in the amendments. The passage of this bill will be a great relief to many anxious candidates who have been laying around the Capitol for weeks waiting for appointment to the petty offices provided for by it, and who have been kept in suspense by the unavoidable delay in settling upon the proper number and compensation of officials to be employed.

A NEW SKINNER LAW.

Senator WOODIN introduced a bill to enable the legal voters of any town, county, city or ward to determine by ballot whether the sale of intoxicating drinks shall be prohibited, and to provide for the enforcement of prohibition when the same shall be voted for by the majority. In its leading features the bill is very similar to a law of this State passed at some twenty-five years ago and subsequently repealed.

ANOTHER REGENT.

An earnest effort was made to follow the precedent set a week ago and elect a Regent by Legislative action through Saturday and Monday, but it failed. The fact was that the members, always rather numerous, who resolve to go home at all events on these days, and make a parade of their votes by voting against any adjournment, have been warned not to repeat their little game, and acted upon the hint. So, as no Regent could be elected, they faced the music today, and threw their votes into the scale for the proposition to adjourn till Monday evening, which was carried in the Assembly 66 to 48, and in the Senate 24 to 22. There was a rather humiliating exhibition of moral cowardice in connection with this matter, several members among the most anxious to get away dodging the question and holding back their votes until it became evident that the proposition would be lost without them.

RELATIVE TO CORPORATIONS.

Senator WOOD introduced a bill providing that it shall be lawful for any corporation organized under the laws of this State, and transacting business in several States, to acquire, hold, and convey in such States, with the consent thereof, such real estate as shall be requisite for such corporation in the convenient transaction of its business.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Mr. BENEDICT introduced a bill providing that the American Bible Society named, in addition to its present powers, may take and hold real estate by bequest, gift or devise.

Quietude in Military Affairs—No Hopes of an Early Peace—The Rebel Chieftains Quarreling.

CITY OF MEXICO, Jan 18, via HAVANA, Jan. 26.—The military operations of the Government remain inactive. There have been no successes since the fall of Oaxaca, which is not considered a great advantage. Gen. PORFIRIO DIAZ failed to embark at Puerto-Angel, and now menaces the State of Vera Cruz. No hopes of an early peace are entertained. The revolutionary chieftains in the north have been quarreling, and several bodies of troops have been disbanded. The Government has collected an advance on the taxes of the present year in the capital, and are now seeking to contract a loan. A change in the Cabinet is again rumored. M. IGNACIO MARICAL is mentioned as Minister to Washington. The revolutionists in the north number 6,000, and are scattered over several States. Gen. GUERRA, from Mazatlan, has arrived at Durango. Supplies of money, arms and munitions have been sent from Durango to SAMANA and others who are co-operating with Gen. GUERRA against ZACATECAS.

Gen. NERI is between Zacatecas and Durango with 4,000 or 5,000 men. Gen. CORONA has sent forces from Guadalaxara to unite with the reserves in Zacatecas. If Gen. NERI is defeated, Zacatecas will fall, and San Luis Potosi will become the next point of interest. Gen. ROCHE has not gone to Vera Cruz, but has arrived at the Capital. Gen. CASTRO has been appointed temporary Civil and Military Governor of Oaxaca. Gen. TREVINO forces Gen. PORFIRIO DIAZ to come north immediately.

The Legislature of Guadalaxara has refused to grant Gov. VALLARTE extraordinary faculties. The annexation fever is increasing. Business, especially in the interior, is almost suspended. Much alarm was caused by a resolution introduced in Congress by M. BERMUDEZ, to grant the Finance and War Departments extraordinary powers.

A railroad train at Puebla was attacked by robbers, and the engineer and fireman of the train, and seven passengers, including a girl seven years of age, were killed. Capt. AYTON LEGRAND, formerly a Garibaldian, and at one time serving in the United States Army, is dead. The Jewish rite of the circumcision was recently performed at the capital, for the first time in the history of Mexico. The Siglo says the revolution is as impossible as ever. The journals say that many of the revolutionists were formerly Imperialists, and cite a number of names.

The Mutual Insurance Companies and Superintendent Miller.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A Mutual Life Assurance Society is an association of a number of prudent, thoughtful persons, each paying so much into a common fund, with the laudable object of providing for their widows and orphan children, in the event of their death occurring before they are able to save as much as would supply their wants. The officers of the Society are appointed (theoretically) by the members, and intrusted by them with the care and management of the funds of the institution; their power, however, being restricted within certain limits by the constitution of the Society. How have the members of our Mutual Life Assurance societies given their officers power to pay hotel bills and steam-boat excursions of as many conventions as Mr. MILLER or any other Insurance Commissioner chooses to bring together? If the members of mutual societies have invested such powers in their officers, the sooner they are revoked the better for their own interests and the morality of the officers themselves. This is merely supposing such powers were invested in their officers; but it is easy to see there are no grounds for believing such a thing to be the case. In a proprietary company the stockholders appoint the officers, who are thus responsible to them, but the position of a mutual company is radically different. Here the whole body of the members are the shareholders, and the officers are responsible to them directly.

Unfortunately when a general meeting is called many members are too indolent to attend and many others are prevented by various causes from so doing; and, therefore, it is not difficult to pack a meeting and pass resolutions only representing the wishes of a small clique. But in a matter such as this, which involves the whole principle of issue, members would probably make it their especial business to attend, and by their votes show their opinion on such a vital point.

Once admit the right of the directors of a mutual society to assume the responsibility of dealing with the funds (a responsibility which belongs only to the whole body of members) and there is no end to the consequences which may result from such an assumption. In this particular instance of Mr. MILLER the error is a very grave one, and besides quite unnecessary. Are not the Commissioners paid for performing their duties, without calling on the Companies in this manner. Mr. CLARKE, the Insurance Commissioner for Massachusetts, evidently thought so at any rate, when he paid his own expenses and refused to put the companies to a cent of expense on his account. Perhaps he thought, as we think, that money paid for such purposes was a malversation of the funds of the companies. It would be well for members of the societies to appoint a committee to demand from their officers a detailed account of what has been paid, and examine the figures carefully, and if a close investigation should prove that the officers have exceeded their duties, they should be strictly called to account for it.

As there is an Investigation Committee appointed by the Legislature at Albany, to thoroughly inquire into Mr. MILLER's administration, it is very probable that these and many other abuses will be brought to light before their labors are concluded. J. B.

Gratuities to Inspectors—Leet & Co.'s Superintendent Gives His Testimony—His Experience in General Order—The Irrepressible Mudgett on the Stand Again.

The dearth of witnesses apparent on Thursday evening, when the Committee was compelled to adjourn from lack of material upon which to work, did not exist yesterday. There was no halt in the proceedings from the hour of commencing until the adjournment for dinner. Several witnesses were in waiting, and two were excused until today. All the space behind the railing was filled with spectators, who appeared to follow the testimony with considerable interest.

JAMES JOHNSON, like his partner, Mr. BIGELOW, knew of only one case in which a gratuity had been paid to an inspector, and he was not quite sure that the man to which that was paid was an officer of the Customs. He only thought so. CHARLES W. VAN SONS has been superintendent of LEET & CO.'s General Order store since October, 1870, and has been in the warehouse business for ten years past, during all of which time he has been connected with General Order stores. The warehouses of LEET & CO. are as good as any he has ever known, and the charges are the same as they have been since the business went into private hands; the average charge for storage is fifty cents a package, to which cartage is added. No special agreement as to charges have been made with A. T. STEWART & CO., but complaint having been made of a charge of $2, it was reduced by witness, on his own responsibility, to $1 75, and orders were given that no higher rates than that should be charged in future. He said that the testimony of Mr. GALE, that $2 50 was sometimes charged for the same packages, which at other times were charged at only $1 25 or $1 50, was not correct. In the instance in which a portion of a lot of cases was left on the sidewalk, a special officer was employed to guard them, and if they had been taken into the store the charges would have been correspondingly higher. The tascience complained of by Mr. GALE, according to this witness, was pretty much on one side. He was so abusive in his language that Mr. LEET gave orders that in future he should not be admitted. The theory of profits derived from cartage charges was denied to be correct, LEET & CO. charging only what is paid to the carmen. The rates are lower than when the General Order business was in the hands of Mr. BIXBY, and considering all the expenses could not be less and leave a profit.

The unfortunate MUDGETT having been recalled to repeat some of his former testimony, was thoughtless enough to bring to the notice of the Committee the brief biographical sketch with which he had been honored in the TIMES on Thursday, for the purpose of denying the correctness of the account of his interview with Gen. PORTER. On being questioned by Senator STEWART, concerning the correctness of the other portions of the article, he first charged the Senator with impertinence—for which he was rebuked by the Chairman, and immediately apologized—and then admitted their general truth. He had known that LEET was receiving a portion of the profits of the General Order business while it was in the nominal possession of BIXBY, in the same way that he had known that PORTER and LINDSAY were mixed up in the matter—that is, he had heard loose talk to that effect. Upon hearing that Gen. PALMER had been removed from the Collectorship on account of his (witness') appointment as Assistant Appraiser, he wrote a letter to PORTER, charging the President with being mixed up with a set of adventurers who had come here to sell privileges and to plunder the merchants. A long and searching examination elicited no facts, though there was abundance of hearsay and opinions. He had believed that the President was personally corrupt until he had found that he was opposed to him (witness.)

A. P. MILLER, a warehouse-man on Washington-street, testified in regard to the charges for storage, cartage, &c., under General Order.

MORNING SESSION.

The first witness examined was JAMES JOHNSON, of the firm of BIGELOW & JOHNSON, iron brokers. He said, in answer to the questions of the Chairman: My experience in the matter giving gratuities to inspectors is not very extended. I know of only one case. There was a lot of iron coming to me, and as I wanted it very particularly I requested the officer, without violating the law, to give me notice when the permit should be sent to the best advantage. I don't know the inspector's name, but I believe him to be an officer of the Customs. The name of the vessel by which the goods were brought was the Johanna Ingels.

To Senator CASSERLY—I can conceive that many merchants would be unwilling to come forward to give testimony here against Government inspectors as they might afterward be subjected to a good deal of embarrassment.

EVIDENCE OF C. W. VAN SAHN.

CHAS. W. VAN SAHN, sworn and examined by Mr. HOWE, said: I am Superintendent of LEET & CO.'s General Order stores since October, 1870. Have been in the warehouse business sixteen years, and have all that time been connected with the General Order stores. Previously I had been with BIXBY & CO. and HOPKINS & CO.

Q.—Do you consider the accommodation furnished by LEET & CO. compare with those of other warehouse-keepers? A.—They are as good as any I have ever seen—perhaps the best that could be had.

Q.—How do the charges made by LEET & CO. compare with those of other warehouse-keepers? A.—They are the same as they have been since the business went into private hands. I have watched the business and regulated the charges accordingly. Have never been connected with the General Order business without having from plaints made of it. Some will complain of the mildest charges.

Q.—What is the rate charged by LEET & CO.? A.—It averages from one cent to $1 for storage. For ordinary-sized cases of dry goods for storage and labor is fifty cents each; cartage, of course, is added. Goods are delivered from LEET & CO.'s stores with more promptitude than I have ever seen in any stores I have been connected with. I know the location of the stores of the Hamburg and Bremen lines, and I don't believe they have any advantage over us in that respect. The entrance to the stores vary in their width; but the difference does not exceed more than eight to nine inches, perhaps. In the Leroy-street warehouse there are from fourteen to sixteen openings, and we could deliver from all of them if occasion required. We are not permitted to deliver goods through any opening except under the supervision of a Government officer. There are two officers who are called store-keepers.

Q.—What is the extreme length of time you know carmen to be kept waiting in your stores? A.—I have known them to wait an hour and a half, but they would not be actually waiting for their goods. They should wait their turn and wait their bills.

Q.—Is it said the firm made a special agreement for the storage of A. T. STEWART & CO.'s goods—do you know anything concerning it? A.—There was no such arrangement. One bill was objected, and it was reduced to $1 75 per package for that lot of goods. Mr. SAVAGE, of Mr. STEWART's Co., came down on another occasion, and said they were not going to pay more than $1 75 a package. I objected, but finally took the responsibility on myself, and let the goods go at that price. Afterward I gave clerks to understand not to charge them more than $1 75, except in extraordinary cases. I heard Mr. GALE give evidence the other evening. He said we sometimes charge $2 50 for goods that at other times we only charged $1 50, and that sometimes our prices for the same packages were $1 25 and $1 50. We charged $2 50 for very large packages. Mr. GALE was generally very offensive when he came to the store, and used such profane and improper language that Mr. LEET gave orders he should be put out of it—was repeated. We never charged $2 50 for a package which at other times we only charged $1 50. When the goods are delivered at the store the receiving clerk determines the size and the rate to be charged under my instructions. Ordinarily he cannot know to whom the package belongs, except in the case of A. T. STEWART, and in that case the boxes bottles are branded on the outside of the case.

Q.—Can you conceive it possible that any clerk in the store should make such a mistake as to charge $2 50 where the charge should only be $1 50? A.—It is possible it might occur in the hurry; but, if attention was called to it, it would be immediately rectified. I remember the case where $90 was charged for machinery and $65 only charged for taking it back. I spoke to the carman who did it, and I found it was the same man brought us back it away. The reason he offered for the refused note was that he was doing a job for the book man that was away, and he did nothing else to be idle. Some of these packages were not taken into the store, but were left in the street. It was rainy weather, and if the packages which were very heavy had been taken inside the charge would be greater. A general workman was detailed to watch them. I never heard that it was complained they were injured until the matter came before the Committee. In the case of A. T. STEWART & CO. the charge was fifteen cents and fifteen cents for wire there was a complaint made, and it was reduced to ten and ten. We could have charged in that case fifteen and fifteen. I heard Mr. HUTTON's testimony given here, in relation to our charges. I have made out General Order charges for Mr. HUTTON for a number of years, and I never knew him to be satisfied. He seems to think that the charges should be deducted from the duties. Mr. GALE complained of insolence there, but the circumstances were these: He had the charge on a package reduced by twenty-five cents, and he came into the store exclaiming, "Here, you——swindlers, give me my twenty-five cents!" The young man to whom it was addressed became indignant, and replied somewhat warmly, as he was justified in doing. LEET & CO. first learned this matter, I believe, from the storekeeper. Mr. GALE went there and represented himself as Mr. AYMAR, a well-known importer, stating he was insulted.

Senator Pratt—What arrangements have your firm brought to bear upon inspectors to hurry goods to your store? A.—None whatever. There has been no influence of that description brought to bear upon them. The amount of General Order goods, I presume, increases with the amount of imports, and that has been increased within the past few years.

Q.—What profit has LEET & CO. from the cartage? A.—None, sir; they simply charge what they pay themselves. The greater part of the goods landed on the side does not go beyond half a mile. The rates of cartage are regulated by certain prescribes. We pay the carman no more than is laid down in these rates, and have occasion to curtail their prices by every steamer. I don't think that any reduction of the charges now existing would be made, and commencing all the expenses would leave any profit.

Q.—Would the uncertainty of their tenure of office constitute an element in their charges? A.—I don't think it would. Complaints made against our charges would average, I suppose, about two in the month. If the complaints are brought directly to us I try and satisfy them by reducing the rates a little, but if they go to the Custom-house first we insist upon our prices.

Q.—It is said that pilfering could take place in your stores and a man could be lost there for hours? A.—That would be impossible, because we have such a number of men there. There has been no case of pilfering in our store since LEET and STOCKING assumed charge of it.

To Senator Stuart—What Mr. STEWART paid $1 50 for in 1864 and 1865 he now pays only $1 25; and what he paid $2 16 for, he now only pays $1 50. I know that these were the charges of Mr. HUMPHREY. Where goods are charged $1 75 for now, $2 25 were charged then, and where $2 25 are now charged, $3 were charged then. After Mr. HUMPHREY died, I went to Mr. BIXBY's store until October, 1870, when I went to W. LEET & CO. During all this time the charges at present are lower than they were then, except perhaps by MASON & CO. and SQUIER & CO., who charged five cents. The charges on the other side of the river I know are less. For an ordinary package they charge but $1. There were always complaints against charges in every General Order store. The complaints I think by reason of the lower rates of the bonded warehouse. In the General Order store the expense is very much greater. There are more men employed, the goods are more frequently handled, and the labor and trouble is consequently greater.

To Senator Bayard—The goods in the bonded warehouse are not so difficult of access as those in the General Order Store.

To Senator Casserly—In some bonded warehouses they take goods for fifteen cents labor and fifteen cents storage. We are entitled to eighty cents and eighty cents, but we only charge seventy-five cents and seventy-five cents. Through competition, telegraph wire and such articles could be stored for almost two cents and two cents. I have offered to take them for nothing and pay labor sooner than have another store get it. Our General Order store is also a bonded warehouse. We have charged Mr. TILLOTSON as much for bonded warehouse as for General Order, because it is optional with us what we charge. It is our custom to charge as much for goods in bonded warehouse as in General Order. I can't say that I informed Mr. TILLOTSON he would have to pay as much for bonded warehouse as for General Order, though it was not necessary. He knew very well he should have to pay it. LEET & STOCKING had the whole of the North River business in October, 1870. Mr. MURPHY was Collector then. Since then charges have as a rule been less than the charges for four or five years previous, except in MASON's and SQUIER's stores. In these stores there was really no difference between the rates. I can't say how long Mr. MASON was in the General Order business. He went out of it in the Fall of 1870. In promptitude of delivering goods, I believe LEET & STOCKING's store is superior to any I have been in.

To Senator BAYARD—I have charge of both of the stores of LEET & CO. The proprietors have a good deal to attend to there in connection with the delivery of goods. They go around to the various doors and see that the men are at work, for sometimes they are disposed to be idle. Carmen sometimes are permitted to go through the stores to get the goods they require. I consider the presence of these men, and as many others as possible, a sort of protection against pilferings or robberies. In paying cartage, we generally pay according to the load.

Q.—Could a system of unreasonable charges exist without the consent and approval of the Collector of the Port? A.—No, Sir. I don't think that there is the same difficulty in getting goods from the bonded warehouse as from the General Order stores.

To Senator Bayard—If goods remained in the store a long time, instead of only a few days it might be necessary to have more or larger stores; but we have never yet refused goods from want of room. If they remained one month there are times when we could not have accommodated all General Order goods.

Q.—Why then should your storage charge be more than in a bonded warehouse, where they are compelled to hold the goods a longer time? A.—On account of the extra labor in overhauling the goods to get out packages which are ordered. In bonded warehouses the goods of each merchant are stored together; in General Order the owners of the goods are not always known, and they may be stored in many different places.

MR. MUGGETT RECALLED.

Mr. Mudgett recalled by Senator Cassserly—Q.—You know Mr. LEET and had some conversation with him in regard to the General Order business. Where was this? A.—It was at Clermont, N. J., a few days after my conversation with Gen. PORTER. Mr. LEET told me that he expected to get the labor contract that I then held, and I told him that Mr. BOUTWELL was about to destroy one little monopoly (referring to the General Order business) at which the merchants complained. He said that he knew a man who could put his hand on Mr. BOUTWELL's shoulder. He reaffirmed the truth of his former statements. The witness then denied the truth of the statements in the TIMES of Thursday, so far as they relate to his interview with Gen. PORTER. He also spoke of statements made by the editor of the Standard on the same subject, on Gen. GRANT's authority, the truth of which he also denied.

To Senator Stewart—He admitted the general truth of the article referred to, though he considered the manner in which the charges were treated was outrageous. The labor contract was given to the lowest bidder. Col. LEET put in a bid, but in this case was not able to control the entire business. The contract was made with Mr. HUTTON's name. This was before Mr. LEET had taken possession of the general stores. It was while he was drawing $5,000 from Mr. BIXBY. He knew it, because everybody about the Custom-house was talking about it. He knew it in the same way that he knew Gen. PORTER and BABCOCK had an interest in the business. After BIXBY was dropped he showed the (BIXBY) agreement as it has been presented to the Committee. He was afterward told by Mr. O. B. MATTISON or JAMES B. TAYLOR that the business was given to PORTER, LEET & LINDSAY. It was common talk. Heard it from HENRY M. WILLIAMS. He stated that he understood that Mr. GRINNELL was compelled to give the business to these men. If Gen. PORTER should deny on oath that he knew nothing of the matter at the time stated, he (witness) would not believe him. Had never made any remarks against the President until after the removal of Gen. PORTER, and the publication of a letter in the TIMES, assigning as a reason the appointment of witness as assistant appraiser. Then wrote a letter to Mr. BOUTWELL saying he was bound to believe that the Administration was in the interest of the corrupt adventurers who were swindling New-York. He heard that the President went to Mr. BOUTWELL and told him that he had appointed an enemy of his, and told him of the reported statements about Gen. PORTER. He then resigned, because he did not wish to serve under an Administration which he did not respect. The resignation was not accepted, but he was discharged.

Senator Stewart—What is there in the TIMES article to which you have referred which is untrue? A.—I have said that the whole of it is scurrious and libelous. I think it is an impertinent question.

Senator Buckingham—You cannot be allowed to say to a Senator that he puts an impertinent question.

Senator Cassserly—This is a personal inquisition more severe than any witness has before been subjected to.

Witness then stated that the note mentioned had never been paid by him, though there had been a law suit, and he had been compelled to pay it. The statements in reference to the interview with Gen. PORTER were all false. In the conversation in Washington in which he charged Gen. PORTER with being connected with the General Order business, he did not mention the President's name. In his interview with PORTER he (PORTER) denied nothing; told him when he had heard, and said sure he (witness) should like to be able to doubt the truth. He had no feeling against PORTER except contained in second of his statements, and he was prompted in the General Order business.

To Senator PRATT—He heard of an interview between PORTER and Collector BARRETT. He was told by one MASON that he was to come, and by HENRY M. WILLIAMS, S. P. HANNORDS and a Deputy Collector by the name of Brogan that the interview had taken place. The conversation he had with Col. LEET in Clermont was at a public hotel. The language he then used was, "I have the Government sure, as sure as hell is on Mr. BOUTWELL's shoulder."

To Senator HOWE—There were quite a number of New-York merchants there at the time, and they were discussing the subject of the transfer of the General Order business from Jersey to New-York. I don't remember any one who was there except Gen. COCHRANE. I don't remember who alluded to Gen. PORTER's connection with it, and the friend of the General's who denied it. I believe I said he was connected with it. This was at the Arlington Hotel, and I was a frequent guest there. Gen. COCHRANE had his residence in New-York City at this time, but I don't know what peculiar business took him to Washington. I don't believe that on this occasion I said Gen. PORTER was interested with Col. LEET and Mr. LINDSAY in the General Order business. The following evening Gen. COCHRANE told me that Gen. PORTER felt hurt at my remark, and desired an interview. I told him what Mr. MATTESON, Mr. TAYLOR and Mr. WILLIAMS had said to me. I reminded him of the article in the Sun, and explained these were my reasons for believing he was interested in it. I also stated that I thought Col. LEET and Mr. LINDSAY were associated with him in it. He denied having any acquaintance with Mr. LINDSAY, and disclaimed all interest in the General Order business. These assurances did not convince me of the truth of what he said, and I told Gen. COCHRANE I had still some doubts upon the subject. I became thoroughly convinced Gen. PORTER was interested in the business when Mr. BIXBY told me concerning Col. LEET's store.

Q.—Did you state in Washington that money was remitted to Gen. PORTER as proceeds of the General Order store? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did you say it was transmitted to the White House or to any one in Washington? A.—No, Sir. I believe, of course, that there was a division of the profits between PORTER, LEET, and LINDSAY, after hearing the statements of Mr. BIXBY. I was introduced to Col. LEET by Mr. FORD, in Washington. It was here Col. LEET FORD, in Washington. It was here Col. LEET made the request already alluded to. Mr. HUNTINGDON, a merchant of this City, was present at the interview, and a few evenings since he said he remembered it.

Q.—Why did not you give this testimony before? A.—Because I was not asked about it. I did not desire to volunteer it. I cannot say at whose instance I was again summoned. Senator CASSERLY or Senator BAYARD, I think, say that a letter was written, stating that I had more information which was not given in my previous evidence. I knew there was! I was prepared to testify to-day. The letter of the Secretary to Mr. GRINNELL, I believe, amounted to a request to have the business transferred from New-York to Jersey City. The letter I wrote, which led to this reply, said I was not opposed to Gen. GRANT's Administration, but to a set of adventurers in New-York. LEET and STOCKING were the people I referred to. Col. STOCKING was levying tax by the cartage bureau, and the merchants of New-York were indignant at it. It was not Col. STOCKING got up this cartage bureau. It was got up by Mr. JACKSON, I think, under the direction of Mr. LINDSAY. I think Mr. LINDSAY told Mr. JACKSON was he wanted to have. I spoke on this subject, and he then completed the plan. I was opposed to the whole thing from the start. I suppose Mr. GRINNELL's authority gave sanction to that scheme. I don't know any one else who could. I can't say if Col. STOCKING had any other connection with it, except to assume charge at Mr. GRINNELL's suggestion. I regarded it as the White House or military "Ring." I knew this privilege was sold to Mr. BIXBY, and one thing being sold I could presume other things could also be sold. The taxes were very large, but no one could tell what they were because of the guidit, and what he heated, and to prevent such a possibility. After further debate the previous question was ordered. The Senate amendments were then concurred in by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Aiken, Alvord, D. L. Babcock, Badeau, Bennett, Blair, B. E. Brown, J. D. Brown, Buckalew, Bucklin, Bullock, Burnside, Cameron, Conkling, Cragin, Crandall, Dennis, Dennison, Dorsey, Dwyer, Eastman, Fowler, Goring, Green, Greenhalgh, Gregory, Hart, Haughton, Healy, A. Hill, D. B. Hill, Hoskins, Houghton, Hungerford, Hustedt, Jones, Kirkland, G. P. Lord, Loughran, Lynde, Mackey, Moore, Mosher, Murdock, Niles, Oakley, Peck, Pierce, Preston, Prince, Ray, Roche, Rose, Sage, Smith, Sniper, Squires, Tobey, D. Tompkins, Tracy, Van Cortlandt, Van Nostrand, J. T. Van Vedder, Wells, West, Whitbeck, Whittaker, Wiley, Woolsey.

NAYS—Messrs. Alberger, J. H. Babcock, Beckwith, Bartl, S. Birdt, Davidson, Fleming, Flammer, Herrick, Hess, Goss, Griffin, Haight, Hawkins, Hayes, Herrick, Hoffister, Judd, Lewis, Lincoln, Lippitt, Morton, Moulton, Osgood, Paige, Pell, Rice, Shepardson, Simson, Smiley, Sumner, Storder, Strauber, Swazin, A. L. Van Dusen, White, Woodward, Wyman, Young—40.

Among the bills introduced were one repealing the Erie Director Classification act; one for the preservation of the public health by preventing the use of second-hand barrels for packing flour, &c.; one to regulate the sale and use of intoxicating liquors; one to enable the legal voters of towns to decide on the sale of liquors.

Mr. SMITH offered a resolution calling on the Governor to inform the House whether bills were presented to him last year as passed, containing provisions which were not passed upon by the Legislature, and which provisions were expunged before receiving his signature. On this, Mr. JACOBS, with a view to making the resolution stronger, proposed to debate it, and it was laid aside under the rule.

A resolution was adopted setting forth that by an act of 1871, $200,000 was appropriated to the Quarantine Commissioners to erect buildings at West Bank, and that the amount has been expended and liabilities incurred, and directing the Commissioners to make, within ten days, a detailed statement, verified by their Treasurer, of persons to whom the money has been paid; the amount paid to each; the date of the payment; the nature of the claim; the amount of the liabilities; to whom incurred; the amount due or to become due to each person; under what understanding agreement or arrangement and for what particular purpose said liabilities were incurred.

The bill fixing the number and pay of the officers and employees of the Legislature, was received from the Senate with amendments, which were concurred in. The Senate then adjourned until Monday evening at ½ o'clock.

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

The Illness of the Prince—A Nation's Loyalty—The Government and the Drama—Effect of Republican Demonstrations—Home Rule for Ireland—"Work and Wages"—Mr. Spurgeon on Rome.

From a Special Correspondent.

MALVERN, ENG., Saturday, Jan. 6, 1872.

HER Majesty and all her royal Court are going to make a solemn procession to St. Paul's to give thanks for the recovery of His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES, and the day, not yet fixed, is to be kept as a national Thanksgiving. This is a thing impossible for Americans, but quite in character for bees or Britons. Loyalty—personal loyalty—is a strong sentiment in the whole Teutonic stock, but it has died out on the other side of the Atlantic. As we go East the sentiment increases in strength. In Russia, the Emperor is looked upon as the father of his people, and the feeling of love and loyalty with which he is regarded is one of devotion, and almost adoration. Two months ago a stranger might have thought that loyalty had died out in England. Republican Clubs were forming on every side, newspapers had a standing heading of "The Republican Movement." Sir CHARLES DILKE was mobbed from town to town. But then came the happy calamity of the dangerous illness of the Prince of WALES, and all was changed. Republican meetings ceased—Sir CHARLES subsided. The whole nation was reading bulletins of the progress of the Prince's fever, prayers were offered in all churches, everybody prepared to go into mourning. Then came the news of the turn of the disease, and the slow but steady recovery. Bells rang for joy; Christmas was a special Thanksgiving, and loyalty was rewarded. There has been scarcely a lisp of the Republican agitation. A small meeting has been held in London to organize a demonstration in honor of Sir CHARLES DILKE, just before the meeting of Parliament, under the presidency of the Maryred ODGER.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE DRAMA.

The Government has not been unmindful of its duties in this crisis. The Press of England has no censorship but public opinion and the laws of libel and sedition, but there is a rigid censorship of the drama, and it has transpired that not only every allusion to the Queen and Royal Family has been struck out of the Christmas pantomimes, but that the Lord Chamberlain has thrown his protecting aegis over her Majesty's Ministers, and carefully run his pen through all allusions to Mr. GLADSTONE and Mr. LOWE. Demon nor fairy, clown nor pantaloon must take their names in vain. We ought to be grateful for such oversight, care, and protection, but the comparatively free Press expresses some surprise at the restrictions placed upon the drama. NAPOLEON III. permitted "Ernani" to be played in Paris, with a crowd of Red Communists applauding every political allusion which could be turned against the Empire. In England they will not tolerate a Christmas joke at Mr. LOWE.

EFFECT OF REPUBLICAN DEMONSTRATIONS.

Dean CLOSE, of Carlisle, has given expression to the at present predominant English feeling in a political sermon in the Cathedral, in which he said:

"Indignant loyalty had been insulted by Republican clubbists. Men had been drinking about babbling treason and trash, when the illness of the Prince of WALES evoked the remarkable expression of loyalty which had been witnessed, to the astonishment of the people of other nations. Under God, this British nation had, by the experience of a thousand years, learned the value of the goodness of those who had gone before. They were always willing to repair the old ship, to remove the rotten beams, and put in better materials. They were not going to sink the ship, but make it float again over many a stormy sea such as it had often weathered before."

Thus Dean is a character—a fierce temperance man, a still fiercer anti-tobacconist, with a horror of disloyalty and the use of railway whistles at the Carlisle Station. But his sermon was one of thousands of a similar character called out by that most fortunate event, the Prince's fever. There is an old proverb—"A fever in the Spring is physic for a king." This princely fever has been medicine for a kingdom.

HOME RULE FOR IRELAND.

A home-rule-for-Ireland demonstration has taken place this week at Liverpool. A letter was read from Sir GEORGE BOWEN, who has given in his adhesion to the cause, and who, after nine-teen years' experience in the British Parliament, has become satisfied that it can never legislate to the satisfaction of Ireland. Mr. A. M. SULLIVAN, of the Nation, delivered an address on "Home Rule." Rev. Prof. GALBRAITH, of Trinity College, Dublin, moved a resolution expressive of pleasure that men of all politics and creeds recognized in the home rule movement a common platform.

"He denied that the Catholics of Ireland were indisposed to appreciate the efforts of Protestant Irish patriots, and he declared that the Irish Parliament when it was in existence was ready to grant justice to Irishmen of whatever faith. The 'infernal measure' of union could never have been carried had not the Catholics and Protestants been deliberately set in antagonism to each other. Had they been united no power on earth could have carried the union, and if they were to come together again no power could prevent them gaining their rights. The reverend gentleman then, at great length, contended that the legislation which had robbed Ireland of an independent Home Government had been a complete failure to produce either political security or social and religious happiness and contentment in Ireland. As an Irish Protestant clergyman, he was home rule national, and not merely political and party question, he should not have been present on that occasion. He regarded it, however, as a question in which the safety and happiness of Ireland, nay, the safety and integrity of the Empire, were involved."

You observe that Ultramontanes and ultra-Protestants are alike taking part in this movement. Mr. BRIGHT is in favor of it. Mr. GLADSTONE has declared that it never can or shall be. Mr. BRIGHT expects to take his seat in the House at the opening of the session, but he may not be able to take the lead in the coming contest.

"WORK AND WAGES."

If the republican movement is in abeyance, that of "work and wages" is in full progress. A daily paper before me has nearly two columns devoted to the disputes, meetings, strikes in various trades and districts. The operative iron-spoon forgers began a strike on New-Year's against paying shop-rent and firing; the boat-builders of the Midland Canal system have got their nine hours a day; the locksmiths and key-makers demand ten per cent. advance in wages; the nailers threaten to strike for an advance; the miners want their condition raised "socially, morally and intellectually," and measures taken to secure the "better protection of their lives while at work." At a large meeting of the Dudley Colliers, they opened the proceedings by singing in full chorus:

"Britannia's sons, though slaves yo be,
God, your Creator, made you free;
He life to all and being gave,
But never, never made a slave."

They want the nine hours a day instead of working at sixts. Finally, the railway engine drivers, who now run sometimes sixteen or eighteen hours a day, are clamoring for nine hours. A driver writes:

"From experience I can say that nine hours is quite enough for anyone to be rattling about on a railway engine. It is enough by day, and is quite enough by night, when the natural feeling will have its course in the system. I was reading some time past in your paper about a scientific traveler who discovered, when traveling in a railway carriage, that a great quantity of dirt could be collected upon a paper spread in the corner of a compartment, and that men in large quantities. Now, if this unpleasantness is experienced in a carriage, let me ask all sensible men to try and think what engine-men are subject to? Let me refer you to the 1st day of January, 1871, when the winds were terrible, and think of the March storms that are yet to come; if we should live we shall have to face them. Think of the blinding snow, the fierce hailstorms, and the drenching rain. It is very nice to sit in a railway carriage and listen to the howling winds and the rain beating against the windows. You are nicely sheltered; but think there are two human beings on the engine that are possessed of the same feelings as you are, but they must stand to their post; there is no escape from it. Considering the responsibility and the anxiety and the exposure that enginemen are subjected to, you must feel convinced that nine hours is quite enough for a day's work, and that enginemen are not paid according to their responsibilities."

And these men, engineers and stokers, are perfectly unsheltered. I have never seen a locomotive in England with any shelter or protection. Rain, snow, hail and the fiercest winds have full sweep. The American engine, with its roof and glass sides is quite unknown to the engineers—drivers, as they call them—in this country. The steersmen on the steamers are at the stern of the boat and equally unprotected.

MR. SPURGEON ON ROME.

Mr. SPURGEON has come back from Rome, and given an account of his visit to one of the largest audiences that ever crowded his great Tabernacle, which he thought one of the largest places in the world until he saw St. Peter's and the Colisseum. On the whole, he approved of St. Peter's, though the dome has a squat appearance, and it has nothing of the grandeur of our own St. Paul's. But it grew upon him and filled his soul with awe.

"What shocked him was to see the statue of St. Peter there. Some people said it was the statue of Jupiter, and to that it had been replied if it was not Jupiter it was the Jew Peter, so it did not matter. The amusing thing was to see the people kissing the toe of the statue. His audience laughed, but it was actually done. He saw gentlemen wiping the toe with their handkerchief and kissing it, old women being helped up to do the same, and little children lifted up to follow the example. There also was the chair in which Peter never sat, and people bowing down to pay homage to it. It was in truth a big Jous-house; an idol shop, and nothing better. It was not the worst image-house in Rome, but it was bad enough, and whatever might be said by those who turned to and professed the Catholic faith, if they were not idolators there were no idolators on earth. Indeed any beastliness would do for a god in Rome. The Egyptians worshipped onions; but these men, with their bones, scraps of hair, and the like, worshipped things which might have manured the onions. He wondered how humanity could have fallen so low."

Mr. SPURGEON's notions about the Eternal City, give us a pretty good notion of Mr. SPURGEON, and of the people who habitually listen to, and laugh at, and cheer him.

NOTES FROM THE PEOPLE.

Very Queer.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

MAY I trespass upon your time by asking a number of pertinent questions through your valuable daily? What are the "Reformers" about, to allow "thief TWEED" to manage the Legislature through "HANK" SMITH? Are they aware how SMITH is using his position to accomplish his end? For instance, A. L. VANDUSEN, a reformed member, voted for ALVORD! VANDUSEN's son, an incompetent Sergeant on the Police force, was immediately promoted to a Captaincy, and a reliable Captain, an American, put on the retired list. Will you also ask why A. L. VANDUSEN was absent when the vote was taken on HAWKINS' bill? and oblige

A REFORMER.

The District-Attorney's Office.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A bill was presented a short time ago in the Assembly, by Hon. CHARLES A. FLAMMER, praying for an investigation into the affairs of the office of the District-Attorney of this City. It passed in the Assembly, but was defeated in the Senate, they presenting the lame excuse that the Judiciary Committee could not be spared. There are thousands of indictments laying in the pigeon-holes of that office, and the people demand an investigation. Let some of our members again present the bill, and he will be sustained by the honest community of New-York.

Hank Smith's Bank.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

For the last ten years I have been a constant reader of the New-York Tribune, always supposing it to be a paper devoted to the interests of the Republican Party and Reform, but for the last six months I have come to the conclusion that it has gone over completely to the Democrats. I imagined this morning that I must have made a mistake, and was reading the World instead of the Tribune.

All I could find in it were Custom-house frauds, Senator WOOD's frauds, Mr. TERWILLIGER's frauds, Corruption in Albany, &c., and not a word about "HANK" SMITH or the Bowling-green Savings Bank fraud. Now, why is this? The depositors of the Bowling-green Bank are quite as anxious to know about this fraud as any of the above-mentioned ones, and I hope, Mr. Editor, that you will try and give us the information the Tribune denies us.

The Wharton Case.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Now that the Wharton trial has closed, and the verdict of the jury has been rendered, it seems to be the proper moment to make a few observations which have been suggested by the course of the experts in this now famous case.

In the first place, the science of chemistry should not be held responsible for the shortcomings and failures of any of its self-styled disciples.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

No. 86.—Steam-ship Western Metropolis vs. John Love, Jr.—Appeal from the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New-York.—This was a libel filed by the owner of the schooner Triumph to recover for the total loss of that vessel and cargo, which was sunk by the steamship Western Metropolis, while on a voyage from Gloucester, Mass., to New-York, at a point near the Cross Rip Light-ship, on the morning of March 17, 1864. The libel alleged that the schooner held her course, pursuant to rules, but that upon the discovery of the schooner by the steamer's officers, the pilot, without waiting to see which way she was heading, ported his wheel and kept it aport, and by this maneuvering struck the schooner, under whose stern he would have otherwise passed. The decree in the District Court sustained the libel, and the decree was affirmed in the Circuit. It is here maintained that the schooner had no light, and that the steamer was navigated with proper care and caution, and cannot be blamed for porting her helm at the crisis of collision. The appellees say that no new evidence upon the merits having been presented to this Court, the decree of the District and Circuit Courts will not be disturbed here because of doubts raised by the counsel.

J. H. Ashton for appellant; R. D. Benedict for appellee.

No. 89.—The Warwick and New-York Transportation Company vs. William A. Wright et al.—Appeal from the Circuit Court for the District of Connecticut.—This suit was brought as a seaman against the Navigation Company, the owners of the steamer City of Norwich, to recover for the loss of the schooner General E. Van Vliet, by collision on Long Island Sound, on the morning of April 18, 1866. The schooner was sunk with all her cargo; the steamer took fire, and all her cargo, with her chain cables, was lost. Some of the libelants were owners of the schooner, others of the cargo; and the charge was that the collision was caused by the negligence of those in the management of the steamer. The decree was for the libelants for the whole amount of the damages in the District Court, and that decree was affirmed at the Circuit. It is here contended that the respondents should have been permitted to show the whole amount of loss caused by the collision, to all parties affected thereby, and that the decree should have been so framed as to give the libelants only such part or proportion of the amount of damages sustained by them, as much value of such interest of the respondents bore to the whole amount of damages sustained by all parties by the collision.

R. H. Owen and G. B. Hibbard, for appellants; R. H. Hunsley and C. E. Ingersoll, for appellees.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART II.

JAN. 26.

Before Judge Freedman and a Jury.

WALL-STREET OPERATIONS—A HEAVY VERDICT.

Merrick G. Reade et al. vs. Euclid Waterhouse et al.—Plaintiffs in this case sue on a note for $10,000, against which the defendants claim that they hold a demand for $18,000, due James F. Cummings on stock transactions between him and William H. Marston, in the name of the plaintiffs, Reade & Chase. The question involved is the agency of Marston for the plaintiffs, they denying the agency, and the defendants insisting that for a long time before the transaction in question there were large operations between their firm and Reade & Chase, all the business in reference to which was conducted by Marston, who, being insolvent, used the name of Reade & Chase to carry on his business.

Verdict in favor of defendants, $13,566 75.

A. Smith for plaintiffs; John E. Parsons for defendants.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS WANTED.

An Effort to Thwart the Wishes of a Liberal Virginian—His Will Contested.

From the Richmond Enquirer, Jan. 25.

The argument in a suit involving the validity of the will of the late SAMUEL MILLER, of Lynchburg, is now going on in the Circuit Court of this city. The suit involves not only important legal questions, but the largest amount of property ever litigated in any suit tried in this State. It will be recollected that Mr. MILLER, after giving several legacies amounting to about $300,000, devised the residue of his estate to the Board of the Literary Fund, to establish a school on the place of his birth, in the County of Albemarle, for the education of the poor orphan white children of that county. This residuary bequest amounts to about $1,000,000. Suits have been frequent over upon the happening of certain contingencies to his illegitimate children by MARY D. DAVIDSON. A bill has been filed by the next friend of these children, insisting that the contingencies have happened and the estate vested in them, and asking that the subject of the residuary bequest be paid over to them by the executor.

A bill has also been filed by the executor seeking the Court to construe the will, and to settle several important questions involving the adoption and satisfaction of some of the legacies—among them the legacy of $10,000 to the Lynchburg Orphan Asylum. It is insisted that these legacies are specific, and were adeemed by the testator in his lifetime by the sale of the stocks which formed the subject of the bequest. It is further insisted that the legacy to the Asylum was satisfied by a gift to the Asylum by the testator in his lifetime, and after the execution of his will, exceeding in amount the value of the legacy. If the legacies shall be held specific and adeemed it will increase the residuary bequest.

The following counsel have been retained: John Goode, Sen., J. Randolph Tucker, Alexander and Craighill for the executor; Judge Meredith for the residuary legatee; Judge Wm. Daniel, Gen. Early and Wood Bouldin for the Asylum; Messrs. Charles L. Motley, Keen and Brown for the Davidson children, and Messrs. Keen and Andrew Johnson for the other legatees.

Disreputable Balls in Boston.

From the Boston Traveller, Jan. 25.

Public attention has recently been called to the character of masquerade balls given in this city, some of which surpass even those of crystal Palace in their disgusting exhibitions and immoral tendencies. They are now repudiated, because of their indecencies, by men who have in former years endeavored to give character to them. They are and have been a disgrace to the city, and we trust that the police will take measures to prevent these violations of the law, and place scenes of dissipation, in the future.

FRIDAY, Jan. 26—P. M.

The sales of Gold for the day were nearly all at 109¼ ⅌ cent. The market is steady as to price, while the demand continues free to pay Customs Duties.

The supply of Foreign Bills is on the increase, and the business for Saturday's steamer was done mostly at 109 ⅌ cent. 60 days, and 109½@109¾ ⅌ cent. sight and short sight. The offerings of short sight drawn against recent negotiations abroad are quite large and from a variety of sources.

In the Money market the ease among the Brokers at 7 ⅌ cent., with frequent exceptions at 5@6 ⅌ cent. on call loan is, perhaps, more manifest because of the sudden dullness which has come over the Stock Exchange speculation. There is so little new business doing in the Railroads and Miscellaneous Shares that the occasion or necessity for shifting or increasing Money loans is greatly diminished from the early part of the week. At Bank there is a good demand for mercantile discounts, and some applications have been made to both Banks and Trust Companies for temporary assistance for the Savings Institutions desirous of strengthening their ready Cash against sudden contingencies.

While there is a continued good investment demand for the Public Funds and for the established Railway Mortgages, the dullness in speculation in other departments of the Exchange is remarked upon by nearly all the Brokers today, and this inaction is marked by apparent steadiness in prices on many of the Bonds which participated in the recent Bull movement, which has the effect, for the time, of discouraging Short sales as much as the prevailing dullness restrains new buyers. There was something of a corner in the deliveries of Reading Stock, and the Cash price advanced to 114¾ ⅌ cent. In the Quicksilver Shares there was a sudden let down of 2@3 ⅌ cent, and a rise of 1@1½ ⅌ cent. in Missouri State Bonds.

After the Boards the market continued dull on a small business in the hall of the Exchange, while there was little inclination to sell for a decline, and about as little to venture upon another decided Bull movement. The following prices were made as compared with Thursday night. In Gold the sales increased to 109¾ ⅌ cent., after regular hours, and the market left off firm. Several of the recent issues of the Arkansas State Bonds in aid of Railways have gone up rapidly on the reported control of the Pennsylvania Central interest of the Memphis and Little Rock and Little Rock and Fort Smith. The Memphis and Little Rock issue has gone up from 60 last week to 70 ⅌ cent. today, and the Fort Smith from 50@53 to 60 ⅌ cent. today.

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

☞ ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY'S FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND LAND GRANT BONDS,

BEARING EIGHT PER CENT. (8 p. c.) INTEREST, PAYABLE IN GOLD, FREE OF TAX,

AND IN DENOMINATIONS OF $1,000, $500 AND $100, can be obtained from the undersigned, or through the principal banks and bankers throughout the United States.

The attractive features of these securities are recognized in the fact that, although they have been but a short time on the market, they are nearly all absorbed, and but a small amount are now for sale.

They combine a perfect security with a liberal rate of interest. This interest account is made light for, and easily borne by, the Company, through the operation of the Sinking Fund created from sales of the Company's land, which, in many cases, draw interest at the rate of ten (10) per cent. per annum. The security behind them is ample in every particular, as they constitute a first and only mortgage on a trunk line of railroad which will soon connect the City of St. Joseph, Mo., (an important railway centre,) with the Union Pacific Railroad at Fort Kearney, materially shortening the distance between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. In addition to this, the bonds have further security in the fact that there is included in the Mortgage the Company's magnificent Lands, amounting to 1,600,000 acres, known to be among the best in the United States. The Mortgage Indenture prohibits the sale of these Lands at less than Four (4) Dollars per acre, and payable to the Trustees under the Mortgage, for the clear and express purpose of retiring these Bonds. The amount thus realized exceeds the entire amount of Bonds which can be issued, and leaves the road, property and franchises free.

The Bonds have thirty years to run, with interest at Eight per Cent., free of tax, payable in February and August in each year.

Both principal and interest are payable in gold.

The principal in New-York. The interest in either New-York, London or Frankfort-on-the Main, at the option of the holder, without notice, and in the gold currency of the country in which they are presented. They are coupon or registered.

Trustees—Farmers' Loan and Trust Company.

The present price of these Bonds is 97½ and accrued interest in currency, from Aug. 15, 1871. But they are receivable at par and accrued interest in payment for lands sold by the Company. The right is reserved to advance the present selling price without notice.

Maps, circulars, documents and full information furnished on application.

Though acting as agents for the sale of this loan, our firm buy and sell in their regular business the Bonds of the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, those of the Eastern Division eight per cent. (8s.) recently placed by us at 97½, being now quoted at from 102½ to 102¾ and accrued interest.

☞ WE OFFER FOR SALE AT NINETY (90) AND ACCRUED INTEREST, $720,000 OF THE FIRST MORTGAGE SEVEN PER CENT. BONDS of the Cincinnati and Muskingum Valley Railroad Company.

Bonds $1,000 each coupon, January and July, principal and interest payable in New-York. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company own the majority of the capital stock of $4,000,000 of this Company, and the completion in October last, of the branch of sixteen miles from Dresden to Zanesville, Ohio, has afforded a direct connection for the valuable local traffic of this section of the State with the system of roads controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and in addition thereto, makes a line to Cincinnati as favorable in character as any existing line.

We confidently recommend these Bonds as a good investment, being issued at the rate of only $10,000 per mile, on a completed road, or only about one-third of its cost.

E. W. CLARK & CO., Philadelphia.
CLARK, DODGE & CO., New-York.

In view of the small amount per mile of the first mortgage upon the Cincinnati and Muskingum Valley Railroad, and the fact that the present business of the line, without Eastern connection, has been more than sufficient to meet the interest upon its indebtedness, I regard the bonds of this Company as a perfectly safe security. Daring Robbery in Broadway by a Woman.

Tuesday afternoon, Mrs. MARGARET CUNNINGHAM, of No. 414 West Forty-fourth-street, was robbed in Broadway of a purse containing twenty-two sovereigns in gold; a Maltese cross, composed of diamonds, amethysts and topaz, which was a very ancient heirloom, having once belonged to a Knight Templar. There was also in the purse a silver cross, with the names of Mary and Joseph on it, and a small locket, with a pink amethyst in the centre. Just before the taking of the purse, Mrs. Cunningham noticed a woman who stumbled near her, and considering her actions suspicious gave a description which led to her arrest, and she was fully identified by the lady as the woman who was near them when she missed the purse; she gave her name as ELLEN LEE, and who is said to be a noted pickpocket, was arraigned before Justice DOWLING, at the Tombs Police Court, yesterday, and was committed for examination.

DAILY, WEEKLY AND SEMI-WEEKLY.

This journal is now thoroughly identified with the greatest political necessity of the hour—uncompromising warfare against all forms of corruption, whether in national or local government. For years past the TIMES has been exposing the demoralizing schemes of self-interested politicians, and its recent warfare upon the Tammany Democrats has been received with universal approval. It has adhered to the pledge given in its original prospectus, more than twenty years ago, that the public should be truly represented, and their interests faithfully guarded through its columns. Its record has been pure and honorable, and the highest aim of its proprietors is to render it more and more worthy of its past history, and of the confidence which the public repose in it. Two out of three of the original proprietors still direct its policy, and guide it on all public questions. They purpose that the TIMES shall continue to keep clear of all narrow and unworthy influences and cliques, and aim to represent the great body of the public, as distinguished from personal factions. It occupies a perfectly independent position, and is free to speak the truth on all subjects and about all men. Its greatly increased circulation throughout the country adds to its power and influence. It will continue to be a faithful exponent of Republican principles, and advocate with untiring energy every cause which tends to further the welfare of the people.

To Advertisers.

☞ For the accommodation of up-town residents, advertisements for insertion in the TIMES will be received at No. 54 West 23d-st., junction of Broadway and 6th-av., and No. 1,241 Broadway, between 30th and 31st sts., at same rates as are charged at office of publication.

☞ The NEW-YORK TIMES has opened a branch office in Brooklyn at No. 44 Court-st. opposite the City Hall, where advertisements will be received until 5 P. M.

The factious course of the Tribune in regard to the new Board of Audit, will produce, before the year is out, bitter results; and we desire our readers to carefully note the method it has recommended. Under the Twombly bill thousands of honest families will be kept out of their well-earned salaries, and the charities will go begging in the streets, and the teachers in our public schools be unpaid for months, while this Board—utterly unqualified for their task—sit on hundreds of fraudulent claims, and decide on bills and accounts which would take experts months to determine and settle. We have no political connection with Mr. GREEN, but we consider him an honest man, who would have done speedily an honest work.

We publish today the introduction to some "Chapters on Reform," which we hope will receive the careful consideration of our readers. We are not permitted to disclose the name of the author—a circumstance which we regret, because that name would have given the essays an authority it will be hard to gain for them now. But we may say that they are written by a very eminent lawyer, who has done much and made many sacrifices for Reform; and his suggestions are entitled to attention from all who are interested in this great subject. We hope to continue the series at regular intervals.

Plain Talk About City Claims.

The Assembly has concurred in the Senate amendments to the bill providing for the financial necessities of New-York, and both Houses stand finally committed to the principle of intrusting a Board of Audit with the paying out of eight and a half millions of the tax-payers' money. It is as well that the people should understand, once and for all, what this piece of legislation amounts to. To do this it is necessary to recapitulate a little. The Board of Apportionment created under that delusive measure, known as the Two per Cent. act, had a prescribed sum of money to dispose of. In dividing it out among the various Departments of the City and County Government, they had to consider, not what were the desired appropriations of these Departments, but how much they could give without exceeding the twenty-three millions odd, of which they had the disposal. The Board had, of course, its preferences, and took care that the greatest hardship should be inflicted in quarters where least noise was likely to be made about it. In this way many charitable institutions, entitled by the law of the State to a certain per capita or other well-defined allowance, were put off with a mere installment of their legal claims. All Departments got less than they asked for, and the Board thereby acquired a very cheap reputation for economy. There is no evidence, however, that any Department made the slightest attempt to keep within the limits of the appropriations voted by the Board. The Department of Parks notoriously exceeded theirs; the Department of Public Works contracted at least one million dollars of liabilities in excess of the money it had to spend; the Department of Charities and Correction some six hundred thousand dollars, and so on.

In this way the liabilities of the City, for last year, turned out at its close to by seven or eight millions in excess of the money provided under the Two per Cent. act for current expenditure. Of this excess, a large proportion was of a kind which was demanded by the highest considerations of public necessity. There were, for example, hospitals, reformatories, and the like, which could not shut their doors without causing incalculable hardship, as well as very great social injury, and which could not keep them open without greatly exceeding their illegally stinted allowance. Add to these, claims for salaries of clerks and laborers still unpaid, supplies furnished to the Department of Charities and Correction, Police, Fire, and Public Instruction, and the money overdue on the street-cleaning contract, and there is a total of about four millions and a half which must be paid, and every day's delay in the payment of which inflicts great loss and suffering upon many thousands of families, and great privation upon many deserving institutions.

Promptly at the opening of the Legislature, Controller GREEN submitted an urgent request that immediate provision should be made for the payment of the claims we have indicated. It must be remembered that Mr. GREEN took charge of the Finance Department of this City when the Treasury was empty, and when the local government was, practically, in a state of chaos. He resisted extravagance, and abolished sinecures, in every Department over which he had any direct control. He had the entire executive system of Tammany officials arrayed against him, and the outside public only, who could but partially appreciate his difficulties, on his side. He found pay-rolls weeks and months in arrears, contractors with hundreds of men depending on them clamoring for money, revenue bonds coming due without provision for their redemption—everything in a muddle. He has restored system where there was utter confusion, he has paid away many millions of money, and audited the claims on which these were paid, without a single accusation of favoritism, of political scheming, or of careless award being brought against him. When, therefore, Senator BENEDICT introduced a bill, partly drafted and partly approved by sundry leading Republicans, giving Mr. GREEN authority to pay bonds to meet urgent claims, and to audit the current accounts of the Departments, we, in common with the mass of Reformers in this City, gave the measure our support. Senator BENEDICT'S bill was met at Albany with the cry of "extraordinary powers," "virtual dictatorship," and so forth. One clause of the bill provided for the payment of over six millions of revenue bonds. To avoid Municipal bankruptcy, that had to be passed in a separate enactment. There remained the clauses providing for the urgent liabilities of the past, and the imperative necessities of the immediate future. These were recommitted for consideration by the Senate Committee on Cities.

Meanwhile, Mr. TWOMBLY introduced in the Assembly two bills, providing for the creation of a Board of Audit to dispose of all outstanding claims against the City, for which purpose $8,500,000 was to be raised, and providing for a Board of Apportionment to vote the sums necessary for the current expenditure of the City until May 1. The Assembly Committee on Cities, of which Mr. HAWKINS is Chairman, did not approve of the cumbrous and vicious expedient of a Board of Audit. The very urgent necessity of providing for that portion of the outstanding claims which were undoubtedly legal being pressed upon them by Controller GREEN, they reported a bill which was virtually the sixth clause of Senator BENEDICT'S bill. The simplicity and urgency of this provision was thought likely to commend it to the Assembly. It was met there, however, by a bill from Mr. TWOMBLY, in which his two previous bills were rolled into one, and which made four City officials at once a Board of Audit to dispose of the indebtedness of the past, and a Board of Apportionment to provide for the necessities, and audit the City accounts of the next three months. This passed the Assembly, and having been submitted to the Senate, the latter substituted for it the bill reported from their own Committee on Cities, being Senator BENEDICT'S bill, amended so as to make it, in all but one respect—the presence of Mr. COCHRANE on the Board—identical with Mr. TWOMBLY'S.

The vital objections to the scheme thus adopted are, first, that the men associated with the Controller in the business of auditing have other duties to attend to; second, they will be called upon to audit their own accounts; third, it invites the whole mass of fraudulent claims against the City to be thrust upon the Board; and fourth, it proceeds on the assumption that Controller GREEN is unfit to exercise the functions of his office. With regard to the last objection, it is sufficient to point out that the Finance Department of the City was created for the purpose of discriminating between just and unjust claims. To intrude the heads of other Departments into the Department of Finance, is at once to destroy its function of supervision, and to discredit the entire system of the division of Municipal offices. Mr. VAN NORT is certainly less fitted to pronounce upon the justice and correctness of City claims, than Mr. GREEN is to pronounce upon the validity of the contracts of the Department of Public Works. And yet the Legislature has decreed that Mr. GREEN shall not, during the next [illegible] months, pay out a single dollar without Mr. VAN NORT'S approval. The claims which ought to be paid are precisely the same kind of claims which Mr. GREEN has been paying since he assumed the control of our City finances. The auditing which will be done by the Board is just such an examination as the Controller has to do every day. If he wanted help, he should have been requested to call in some gentlemen of character and ability, holding no official position. To render it possible for the veto of such a man as VAN NORT to obstruct the whole course of City business, is, in the last degree, absurd.

The Mutineers.

A company of "Liberal Republicans" from a portion of the Counties of Missouri have called a "Mass Convention" at Cincinnati, on the 6th of May next. Their avowed purpose is to "insure the defeat of Gen. GRANT, should the Convention in June be so infatuated as to nominate him for a second term." Meanwhile, the correspondents of newspapers unfriendly to the Republican Party represent that Senator SCHURZ is going about declaring that he will not accept the decision of the Philadelphia Convention, if it should be in favor of the renomination of the President, but that "he and those who agree with him will appeal to the country against it." This course is undoubtedly open to him. The Republican Party will bind no man to submit to its choice against his will, however he may have been undeservedly honored by it. It will accept without reluctance the duty of defending its candidates and its principles against any who may dispute the fitness of the one or the soundness of the other. No party ever had less need or less inclination to shun the broad light of free discussion, and if the Philadelphia Convention shall name Gen. GRANT for re-election, Mr. SCHURZ "and those who agree with him," will find any appeal they may choose to make to the country fully and frankly met.

In the meantime, it is as well to look at the grounds on which SCHURZ'S friends—the "Liberal Republicans"—invite co-operation, and on which, if they have the courage to make it, their appeal to the country is likely to be based. They have undertaken to define these grounds beforehand, in the resolutions to which we have referred. In the first place, they do not, they say, propose, by act or word, to "endanger the rightful sovereignty of the Union, emancipation, equality of civil rights, or enfranchisement." On those points they own to agreement with all good citizens; and as these are cardinal points in the principles of the Republican Party, as determined by its past achievements, it is evident that the separate and disorganizing action they propose must be justified by something the Republican Party is likely to do or leave undone in the future—on some demands which they make, and feel the need of an independent convention to enforce. These demands their resolutions set forth as follows: They demand equal suffrage for all, and amnesty for all. The first they have; the second they will substantially get next week. If they do not get it absolutely, the only exceptions will be members of Congress and officers of the United States Army or Navy, who deserted their posts to join the rebellion. No sane man proposes to "go to the country" to get those exceptions, if made, removed. They next demand the entire elimination of the element of protection from the tariff. The Republican Party is pledged to reduce the taxes so far as is consistent with the needs of the nation, and in doing so to remove the protective features whenever they have become justly obnoxious to the public sentiment. SCHURZ'S "Liberal Republicans" have no intention of disputing with the party at large on the difference between this measure of reform and clean free trade; they know that the country would go dead against them.

They next denounce, in language nearly identical with that of the Civil Service Report, the evils that require reform in that service, and condemn suppression of investigation. On these two points the Republican Party, whoever its candidate may be, will present the record of the present Administration without reserve. It is absurd to suppose that the Missouri Republicans contemplate an appeal to the country to decide which is most fruitful in genuine reform, the acts of the Government, or the mere professions of its critics, which their own acts sadly belie. They finally demand that the "growing encroachments of the Executive power" shall be put a stop to, and as specific examples of what ought to be changed in this direction, they cite certain alleged evils, each one of which, if it exists at all, exists by the action of the United States Senate, the branch of the Government established as a check upon the Executive, and regarded from its inherent structure as the representatives of the States, in whatever interests they may have requiring protection against Executive encroachments. These four examples are the use of coercion and bribery to ratify a treaty, implying a degradation on the part of the Senate, which few men would like to charge before the American people; the packing of the Supreme Court—an act which could not be accomplished without the corruption of the Senate; the seating of members of Congress not elected by the people—something over which the Executive has neither direct nor indirect control; and the resort to unconstitutional laws to cure the Kuklux disorder—the Kuklux law, whether unconstitutional or not, being a matter in which the Executive only obeyed the vote of a very heavy majority of both Houses of Congress.

We have recited every demand made by these "Liberal Republicans." It will be seen that they are mere pretenses. They reveal only by inference the real motive which prompts the proposed independent action. That motive, concealed and yet patent, is simply personal hostility to President GRANT. On the justice or injustice of that hostility the Republican Party, if it secures the nomination of its candidate at Philadelphia, will be [illegible] to appeal to the country.

Stand Firmly by the Charter.

We have heartily commended, and shall continue to support, the Charter drafted by the Committee of Seventy. Its provision, especially of proportional representation both in the Board of Aldermen and in all the bureaus, through the cumulative vote, is one of the great steps in advance in our political progress. This will at length give the intelligent minority in this City some control and check over its Government, and a share in all its public administration. For the first time in many years, when the new Charter becomes law, will the Republican Party in this City—which embraces an immense majority of the most intelligent classes—enjoy a representation in every department of the City Government, and that through their own votes.

Still, while commending this and other features of the scheme, we must remind our legislators that, even among thinking men, there are certain ebbs and flows of opinion, and that just now in this City there is a kind of reaction set in for localism, which is passing beyond the point of sound reason and judgment. The incessant Democratic outcry against "Commissions" has produced its effect even on Republicans, though without the smallest grounds, as all these departments which depended directly on the Legislature or Governor have been admirably managed, and the worst abuses have crept in under the purely "localizing" Charter of last year. We think the Subcommittee of the Seventy who drafted the new Charter, have been too much influenced by this "localizing" direction of public opinion, and that for this reason some of their otherwise excellent work is defective. We believe that it would have been better for the interests of all if the Boards of Health and Police had been made "Metropolitan," and rendered more directly connected with the State at large. It is certainly among the possibilities that complications might occur where it would be very desirable if the Police of this City were not connected directly with the party in majority and their authorities, but were under a certain control of the outside communities of the State, through the Governor.

A very serious error, we fear, in this same direction, is the feature in regard to "City Charities." There are, as is well known, numerous charities in New-York which are doing an immense work for the public good dependent, in part, for support upon public moneys. Many of these, such as the House of Refuge, the Juvenile Asylum, the Asylum for the Blind, the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, and others, receive their objects of treatment from various parts of the State. Others are, to a large degree, supported by private subscriptions. Of these are the Home of the Friendless, the Children's Aid Society, the Five Points' Missions, and similar institutions. Under the new charter, these are all made immediately dependent for their share of public support upon the approval of the "Commissions of Charities." Now, it is well known, that both now and in the future, this Bureau will represent, mainly, the Irish Catholic interest in the City. Minority representation will never change this fact. Such a Board, a majority probably composed of persons who are Catholics or bound to Catholic interests, will be authorized to "inspect" these old and carefully-managed Protestant institutions, and to refuse them any share of public moneys, if they do not conform to their ideas. Every intelligent man knows that there is not one chance in fifty that a Bureau to be chosen by a Democratic Mayor, and a Democratic Board of Aldermen, will contain a tithe of the intelligence or character possessed by the private Boards of Trustees of these institutions. It is well-known that these asylums and charities have always been infinitely better managed than the public charities of the City. Now, it is perfectly credible that a future Bureau of Charities might desire to put in operation some such measure as Mr. NORTON'S act for "Hereditary Religion." They might undertake to say that the House of Refuge or Juvenile Asylum should teach no religious doctrine, contrary to the supposed faith of the parents of the children committed to them. Or they might forbid the Children's Aid Society to transport any City waifs to the West, on the ground that there was danger of the little vagrants becoming Protestants. Both these efforts have been made before by the bigoted, and they, not improbably, will be made again.

Why should we expose our well-tried and long-established charities to such dangers? If they need inspection and approval, before public moneys should be voted to them, let it be done by the existing State Board of Commissioners, who have shown themselves a very able and impartial Board of Examination, and to whose inspection our City charities could be safely intrusted. Let the Legislature give this Board additional powers, and strike out the feature from the charter which requires the approval of the Department of Charities and Correction, before the money appropriated by the Legislature can be paid these charities by the Department of Finance. It may be objected that all those institutions may escape the action of this provision of the charter by not receiving public moneys. But it should be remembered that many of them could not exist at all without public aid; that they are now doing a public work of immense value to the City, at a far less expense, and much more thoroughly, than could be accomplished in any other way. To withdraw all public support from them would be a calamity to the community.

Have We a Potter Force?

Close on the heels of the Panormo murder in Brooklyn, we have in our own City a midnight assault quite as outrageous, if anything, more daring, and which only the merest accident prevented from being an equally brutal assassination. People who have read the account published yesterday in our local columns of the attack on Mr. CHAILLE, at the door of the St. Cecilia Hotel, on Wednesday night, may well congratulate the belated wayfarer in our streets in future, to have any security for life and property except his fortune or his prowess. On that evening, it will be remembered, there was a bright moonlight. Hardly at any hour of the night can Broadway be called deserted or lonely, certainly not at the time, 2 o'clock in the morning, and the place, on the corner of Twentieth-street, at which this attack was made. That, under these circumstances, and at the door of a hotel where at that hour numbers of people are awake, and within hearing of any cry for help, a highway robbery should be attempted, argues, in our criminal classes, a sufficient degree of contempt for Mr. KELSO'S Police. The scorn appears to be justified by the conduct of the patrolman, who politely stood aside to let the fleeing robbers escape. We hope to have this efficient officer's name, that he may be recommended for speedy promotion on a force which he is evidently calculated to adorn.

From a very different feeling we hope also to have the names of the two officers of Mr. BERGH, who so promptly interfered to save Mr. CHAILLE from robbery, and possibly from death. Mr. BERGH and his officers have been visited with a great deal of odium for simply doing their duty. This is not the first instance where they have gone beyond their duty to protect human as well as irrational life. For this they should be rewarded. But it is not reassuring to those who pay large taxes for a strong Police force, to know that their safety depends so largely on their own physical ability, or on volunteer and hap-hazard aid. The miscreants who committed this audacious crime ought to be made examples of if they are caught. We can scarcely hope for either of these desirable events, with the memories of ROGERS and NATHAN and PUTNAM fresh in our minds. But we do trust that immediate action will be taken by the Legislature to reorganize our utterly demoralized Police. A proper Police force should be first of all preventive; failing that, certainly detective. Mr. KELSO'S ornamental dummies are neither.

Bayard and Casserly Skating on Thin Ice.

Senators CASSERLY and BAYARD deserve a little sympathy. They came here determined to "make a case" against GRANT and the Republican Party. They were promised, and have received, the active co-operation of the Tribune and all the Tammany Republicans. For several days they threw out their dragnets to get in all the jaundiced complaints of disappointed office-holders and office-seekers. They received as evidence everything which any one had heard that any one else understood some one had reported; and Senator BAYARD once or twice propounded the theory that to this twaddle the weight of evidence was really to be given, because the persons who repeated it to the Committee made it a business to gather in twaddle wholesale. But soon witnesses came to contradict the loose stories circulated about them. One indignant member of the Legislature, whom Mr. GREELEY represented as voting as the Custom-house told him to vote, appeared to say that he was his own master, voted as he thought would sustain the Administration which he approved, and was not to be dragooned by Tribune or Custom-house. Another member whom GREELEY had in like manner slandered, wrote from Albany to say that he had expressed his determination to vote for SMITH for Speaker immediately after the election, and had not changed it. Two other members have come forward with similar evidence. Finally, Mr. GREELEY himself has been obliged to admit that when he said he had met three or four hundred Custom-house officers in various parts of the State, he didn't mean it.

Collector ARTHUR being called upon to furnish the correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury as to a weigher nominated by Mr. MURPHY, furnished copies of the correspondence; but, as there were some blanks indicated by stars, wise Mr. CASSERLY insisted upon full copies, though one of the Senators assured him that the omitted portions related to other nominations. In a day or two the blanks were duly filled by the Collector, with the names of various Smiths and Robinsons, and CASSERLY'S mare's-nest was robbed of its eggs. On Saturday it appeared that some one at Boston had, several days previously, written to Mr. BAYARD, complaining of something that occurred when he arrived here by the Parthia last Summer. Mr. BAYARD, eager to find out something, wrote to the Boston man for more particulars, and got a reply inclosing a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury. These the Senator hastened to lay before the Committee, with a grand outburst of fireworks, in which abuse of the Customs' officers was mingled with "outrage," "enormity," and other strong substantives. The letter, on being read, showed that the passenger brought over some new silk in his trunk, and was made to pay sixty dollars' duty. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury showed that the money had all reached its proper destination, but as the passenger said he had made no entry of the goods, and complained of some incivility, Mr. BAYARD and Mr. CASSERLY denounced in chorus the "loose" way of doing business. They finally consented that the Collector be called upon for an explanation, and the Collector consequently transmitted the papers, showing that the passenger did make a declaration, that thereupon the goods were appraised, and the whole business was done in a regular manner, except that, to oblige the passenger, instead of sending the goods to the public store, where he would be subjected to delay and expense, the goods were taken to the Barge office for a few hours, until the passenger could get money to pay his duties.

Messrs. CASSERLY and BAYARD must begin to see that they will not be able to "break down" Gen. GRANT with weapons of this kind. On Monday when some one wrote to complain that a reply sent him by the late Collector was uncivil, they managed to discover that the reply was quite proper. And finally when, on Monday, Col. LEET overthrew a huge castle of suspicion they had been industriously raising, by his offer to submit his books and papers to the Committee, or to an expert selected by them, the fault-finding Senators really received it without any open outburst of vexation. Let them persevere. Tribulation and disappointment soften many an asperity, and the time may come when Mr. CASSERLY will cease to be petulant, and then, perhaps, will refrain from insulting witnesses. If so, the investigation will have not been without its good results. Meantime we suggest that they return to HOPPER'S arms. At the outset of the investigation he was ever at their elbows, and was loud in his expression of what he could tell, and Messrs. CASSERLY and BAYARD were anxious to examine him. Gradually the anxiety on their part disappeared. Soon it was suggested that he communicate his views by letter, and on Monday a letter from him was received with an expression little short of derision. We trust they will not treat MULDERY, BERNARD HESS, Tribune LEET, or LINDSAY with such ingratitude.

Mistaken Identity.

The Tichborne case drags its slow length along, and, astonishing to say, it now seems likely that the evidence for the plaintiff, which not long ago appeared literally overwhelming, will be upset after all. By that strange law of association so frequently illustrated and so hard to explain, several other cases of disputed identity have arisen in England to divide public attention and provoke controversy. By far the oddest of these has turned up at the little village of Kirk Langley, a few miles from Derby; and if anything more mysterious ever occurred, either in or out of fiction, we have not heard of it.

Twenty years ago there lived at Kirk Langley a young fellow named DILIGENCE KERRY. He was of an ambitious temper, and, wearied of the monotony and limited scope of life in a rural hamlet, resolved to seek his fortune elsewhere. With the aid of friends he procured an appointment in India. Just before starting he married a lovely girl of the village. It was agreed she should not go out with him at once to India, but should wait until he had prepared a home there. KERRY sailed and reached his destination. Before long he heard indirectly that his wife had died of gastric fever. Soon after, friends in England wrote to the same effect. The afflicted husband, never doubting the truth of the story, remained in India, and devoted himself to the accumulation of a fortune. In the course of years this was accomplished, and KERRY returned home last Summer a rich man. He sought his native village and settled down in "Starling Cottage," where he now resides. Not long after his return he happened to be seen one day by a certain Mrs. RUCKTUCK, of Liverpool. This lady promptly declared to her friends that KERRY was the husband of a neighbor of hers, he having left the country some years ago. Mrs. RUCKTUCK at once communicated with the deserted wife, and the latter repaired with alacrity to Kirk Langley. The moment she saw KERRY she identified him as her husband, and, despite his protestations, insisted on claiming him as such. The strange dispute naturally produced much consternation in the quiet village, and proof was quickly sought on both sides to make good the respective assertions. Pending this, a second woman, one Mrs. SPAGG, suddenly appeared on the scene and declared that KERRY had been married to her and had deserted her. Our readers will, perhaps, like to know that the whole story is vouched for by respectable Transatlantic journals, before being told the sequel. That sequel, so far, is, that four other women now came forward, each of whom claimed KERRY as her own lawful husband. It is hard to understand how so many creditable witnesses in the current suit should swear to their belief in the identity of the claimant with Sir ROGER TICHBORNE—assuming, that is to say, that he is nothing of the kind. But the case of KERRY is even more remarkable, since each of the six women declares him to be a separate and distinct individual. If it be conjectured that an explanation lies in the fact that KERRY was an unscrupulous bigamist, and had really married all these women, one after another, the answer is that the hypothesis is already disproved; for a commission to India was issued, affidavits were taken there and sent back to England, and it has been conclusively established that at the times the women swear the marriages took place in England, the alleged bridegroom was actually in India.

Poor DILIGENCE KERRY is therefore extricated from his dismal position, and his various pursuers are left to fight the battle out among themselves. How far the attractions of "Starling Cottage" and the supposed affluence of its master may have prompted this extraordinary attack it is hard to say. Such a motive might have actuated the first assailant, or even the second, but that it should have moved their followers on a line stretched almost to Macbeth's "crack of doom" is incredible. Indeed, it is most probable that all the women really believed what they asserted, and that through some unlucky chance, and possibly through a general resemblance to a type of form and feature prevalent in the neighborhood, the whole party were deceived. When so remarkable a thing happens in real life, and coincidently with a controversy founded on similar uncertainties, it helps to make intelligible what was before so puzzling. We can understand, for example, how many of the witnesses for the claimant in the Tichborne case may be thoroughly honest and yet absolutely mistaken. Of course there is some difference between proving a negative and an affirmative, and DILIGENCE KERRY aimed to do one thing and the putative Sir ROGER another; but the women who claimed the former for their own were as confident as the strongest witnesses who swear to the latter's identity; and the novel blunder in one case gives plausibility to the expectation of a like result in the other.

MINOR TOPICS.

We hope none of our readers will fail to read the report of the meeting in favor of prison reform, held last evening. The address of Dr. WINES gives a striking account of the progress of the movement, originating with the American Association for an International Penitentiary Congress in London, on July 3. This project has met warmed approval and hearty co-operation from England, France, Italy and Germany, and its results cannot fail to advance the cause of prison reform in every country. Meanwhile, the National Prison Association is pressing its work in every State in the Union, and deserves unreserved approbation and support.

On Tuesday next the State Senate Judiciary Committee will resume the hearing of the arguments for and against the bills affecting the Erie Railway. One clause of one of these bills gives the people, through the Attorney-General, the right to inspect the books kept by the Ring for the last four years. Mr. SHERMAN said of this clause the other day that he could not speak of it without indignation. Perhaps it will be in order for the Committee to inquire more particularly as to the source of this indignation. Are Mr. SHERMAN'S clients afraid to show that a road which ought to make a profit of over eight millions a year for its shareholders, has in reality been used to aid the coal mines, oil wells, and other private enterprises of the Ring, and that these enterprises have been started and sustained with the funds of the road? We understand quite well why the Ring don't want the people's representative to get at the books. It would be well if the Committee could make the reason plain to the people also.

Spain has got a ministerial crisis of more than usual violence. The young King, having, apparently, got tired of Ministries that were only formed to be defeated and driven to resignation, resolved to sustain Señor SAGASTA and his colleagues against the Deputies, and refused, accordingly, to accept their resignations. Hence the decree dissolving the Cortes, and virtually appealing to the country. Why a dissolution under such circumstances should have moved a member to exclaim, "The time has come for barricades," and have occasioned wide-spread popular excitement, it is rather difficult to explain. But in Spain things are managed in a way entirely peculiar to the country, and the outside world hardly attempts to understand, and certainly refuses to take interest in the faction fights known there as ministerial crises.

Nevada continues to keep up a respectable rivalry with California in the way of furnishing the most astounding sensations known to modern journalism. The latest contribution of this nature comes from Virginia City, in the shape of a "corroboration" of a fight, which is said to have occurred between two men named ARMSTEADT and CHARLES. CHARLES was an escaped convict, and ARMSTEADT a convict-hunter. They were both armed with Henry rifles, and, according to the "corroborative" testimony, literally shot each other to pieces. To perform this unique feat, it appears that ARMSTEADT fired fifteen shots, hitting his man twelve times, while CHARLES fired eleven shots, nine of which took effect in the body of his opponent. The person who witnessed this terrible duel, from a convenient distance, it is to be presumed, to explain the seeming improbability of men standing up under so many wounds, says that "they fought so fast that they had no time to die." Those of our readers who remember the case of a notorious New-York rough, who once walked to Bellevue Hospital and coolly demanded to have his wounds dressed, after having been shot at some twelve times, will, we have no doubt, find less difficulty in believing the Nevada story than those with whom it originated.

An animated discussion has been continued for some time past between certain sections of what is known as the English and French Press of Canada, in reference to the propriety of sending replies in English to letters written in the French language, and forwarded to the Government by persons in quest of information on various subjects of public interest. Le Minerve claims that such treatment is not courteous to the 100,000 French-speaking natives of the Dominion, even though the object is to render a general knowledge of English imperative upon the rising generation, and, if possible, to discourage the cultivation of French among the farmers and coureurs. The newspapers printed in English are of opinion that so long as the two languages are maintained on the same footing, a complete unification of Canada cannot be effected. All the writers agree that something ought to be done for the sake of harmony, but none of them seem to be able to suggest that "something" which is so much needed.

Officer WOOLSACK, of the Brooklyn Police, certainly merits some public recognition of his zeal and efficiency in discharge of duty. He was on the car which Mr. PONORMO entered after the attack that caused his death. The dying man came so close to him that, by his own admission, "he stood on one side to let him pass." He observed the notice which Mr. PONORMO'S pitiable condition attracted from the conductor and passengers, and questioned the former about it. Indeed, the poor music-teacher must have been a noticeable object. "Blood," according to another passenger, Ex-Health Officer COMKLIN, "was streaming from him; his hat was all bruised, and battered, and bloody; his clothes were saturated with blood." When he sat down, "the wounded man swayed to and fro, as though he was going to fall," and this witness saw plainly that he had been "fearfully beaten." All this Officer WOOLSACK must have seen equally well. But he did not think it necessary to interfere. No, this intelligent guardian of the public safety "didn't think the man needed any assistance." This man, with his skull beaten in, half delirious, and covered with blood, "saw me," the majestic WOOLSACK, "standing in full uniform, and if he had been robbed he should have told me." Is there not possibly some other public station in which Officer WOOLSACK'S modest dignity may be turned to better account?

The following "opinions" were given in the Express of yesterday evening—one on the first page, the other on the second:

| The TIMES handles the whitewash-brush with great freedom today, on a vain attempt to cover up the blood spots on the infamous General Order Business. And to wipe out, as well as it can, the traces of the President's partnership with LEET and his ally. "Look." | The TIMES, upon the exposures made, comes to the conclusion that the General Order Business ought to be abolished. No honest man can doubt that it has been administered in the interest of greed, and not at all for the public good. |

THE LATEST MYSTERY.

The Murderers of Mr. Panormo Yet Undetected.

The Brooklyn Police at Last Aroused—Arrest of a Gang of Highwaymen—The Man in the Light Coat—The Coroner's Inquest.

The Police of Brooklyn, goaded into activity by the imputations of their mediocrity which have been showered upon them from every quarter, have at last succeeded in making some arrests of suspected persons. It appears that on the night when Mr. PANORMO received his death wounds the Police of the entire city were off attending to the primary elections of the Democratic Party, and that more than one district was entirely neglected. At one primary election poll at least twenty Policemen were observed, and all were supposed to be from the Fourth Precinct, in which this murder of Mr. PANORMO occurred.

The fact has already been stated that Signor MAVARNO was assaulted by highwaymen on the night of Tuesday, near the place where this fatal wounding of Mr. PANORMO occurred. It now appears that SOLOMON WASSERMAN was similarly assaulted, on the night of the 15th inst. near the corner of Cumberland-street. This case was brought to the notice of Capt. POWERS, but he did not see fit to report it to his chief. On the evening of the 18th inst., Prof. VAN NORDMORE was attacked by highwaymen near the corner of De Kalb-avenue and Fort Green-place, but defended himself successfully with a pistol. This occurrence was reported to Capt. POWERS, but he took only a passing notice of it.

About midnight on Thursday a squad of Police of the Fourth Precinct under Detective CORE made a descent upon a shanty in Hudson-avenue, where they captured JAMES MCLAUGHLIN, an iron-molder, twenty-eight years of age. They then went to a place in Raymond-street and arrested JAMES GILROY, a laborer, twenty-four years of age, and JOHN KILLMEAD, aged twenty-two, who were taken to the Station-house. MCLAUGHLIN has just emerged from Sing Sing, where he has spent ten years on conviction for burglary; GILROY has been in jail for manslaughter, and he is suspected of having killed two men. He was convicted in a riot on Johnson-street about a year ago, in which a man was murdered, and he is described by those who know him as being the worst man in Brooklyn.

Mr. WASSERMAN, above referred to, identified MCLAUGHLIN and GILROY as two of the men who assaulted him, and Prof. VAN NORDMORE felt quite certain about KILLMEAD as one of the men who attacked him. The latter is represented as being an infamous character, and Capt. POWERS, in whose district these men have lived, says the three belong to the very worst gang of thieves in the community. Comment upon this assertion is unnecessary, except in a quiet way Capt. POWERS did not discover the fact before it was too late.

STATEMENT OF MR. SEARING.

Mr. SEARING, one of the men who assisted Mr. PANORMO to the drug-store, stated substantially that he saw two men standing under a tree supporting a third, in front of MARVIN'S drug-store. One of these men wore a light overcoat. On inquiring into the matter, Mr. SEARING found that the man in the centre was PANORMO, and that the two others were strangers. Mr. SEARING deposed, one of these men went off in search of a policeman. After waiting a moment or two, PANORMO scrambled to his feet, with the assistance of the tree, and proceeded up Oxford-street, staggering and reeling like a drunken man. The mysterious man in the light overcoat followed him up Oxford-street at a slight distance, the last seen of the poor Professor by Mr. SEARING being when he halted a moment in Oxford-street, shadowed by the man in the light overcoat.

It will be remembered that Mr. BOYLAN, the butcher on Park-avenue, whose statement was given in the TIMES yesterday, spoke of having met two men a short time before the time of the murder, one of whom wore a light overcoat. It was a short man, dressed in this manner, who dragged the dying man to the drug-store, and the same man evidently dogged Mr. PANORMO to the Myrtle-avenue car. Early this morning a German named MILLER was arrested, whose description accorded exactly with that given by Mr. SEARING. MILLER is a short, ill-looking man, with a ragged red moustache. His hair is long and unkempt, and he has a pair of small, bloodshot eyes. He wore a dirty yellowish white overcoat, and seemed oppressed by a sense of his position, and acted violently. He is a peddler, and is not able to read or write. He said that at 9:55 o'clock, or thereabouts, he was passing up Park-avenue toward Oxford-street, when he found PANORMO lying in a pool of blood. Assisted by a stranger he carried him to the drug-store of Mr. MARVIN, and remained with him under the tree until he left.

THE INQUEST.

The inquest was commenced yesterday morning, when the following testimony was taken:

Mrs. SNOW being sworn, said: My name is SARAH A. SNOW; I live at No. 198 Pineapple-street; I keep a boarding-house there; I know the deceased well; he has been boarding with me for over four years; he occupied a room on the fourth floor; he was a musicians; he used to sometimes play in the house; he was a single man; he only had pupils visiting him while he was with me; he had a great number of pupils, both adults and children; he rarely commingled with the other boarders in the house with the family; he was a strictly sober man, his disposition was very amiable; never knew him to be engaged in a quarrel with any one; he was always on the best of terms with everyone in my house; I never heard any one threaten him in any way or manner; he was in the habit of telling me his financial condition; I knew all his business; he was not a man of very great financial means; he owed very many bills out; he had no property or real estate, neither any stocks nor bonds; I don't know how much money he was worth; he had no cash in the bank; I know this from personal conversations with him; he had a piano in the house; don't know whether he owns it entirely; he had no other property that I know of, except a guitar, banjo, flute and music; I remember once hearing a little disturbance between PANORMO and some other person about the piano on last October; the trouble was between deceased and ARTHUR W. WELLS, a boarder in our house; I was present; Mr. PANORMO made a blow at Mr. WELLS with the nose of this piano, and Mr. WELLS thought he charged him too much; there was only a few words about the matter; I was passing through the room and I heard them disputing about it; they were not violently excited; they were not on terms of intimacy after that; Mr. WELLS generally kept to his own room, and we, ourselves, rarely saw him; Mr. WELLS never spoke to me relative to his difficulty; Mr. PANORMO spoke to me in a laughing way several times about it; I don't remember that there was any other quarrel; I am ready to swear that there never was in which deceased was a partner; we have a list of his pupils; I believe I gave it to the officers; for a year or two the deceased gave a concert; he gave a public concert on the 22d inst. at the Brooklyn Institute in Washington-street; Mr. PANORMO did not state to me whether it was a financial success or not; on Tuesday last he told me that he thought he would make a little; don't know how much; he did not tell me; he did not state the amount, neither did he exhibit any money; he had some out-door pupils and some inside; Mr. DALE, of Myrtle-avenue, collected some of the money of this concert; Mr. DALE was a partner in the affair with PANORMO; there was $20 collected at the door, and $18 realized from the hat-room; he did not tell me whether that money had been paid over to him; I don't think that deceased ever paid any money to me; he died in his debt, except some $4 for tickets; we never charged him for board; he taught my children; he never went out at nights, except to give lessons; he never expressed any fear of being hurt at night; on Tuesday night when he was last seen alive, he left my house shortly after half-past seven; I was talking to him in the sitting-room at that time; he went away without an overcoat that night; I didn't see him again until he returned home; I then he went out he spoke and acted in such exceedingly high spirits that my attention was attracted by his lively manner; I mentioned it to my daughter; I remarked to my family to the effect that Mr. PANORMO appeared to be in good spirits, and I ascribed it to the success of the concert; I was not at home on his return that evening; I was at New-York; when I returned, deceased was at my house, lying on the sofa in the parlor; he seemed to be conscious; I went over to the Academy of Music in New-York with Mr. WALKER, of No. 61 South Ninth-street, Williamsburgh, and my husband; Mr. WALKER is married; Mr. WELLS was on the Greenpoint car to go home; I was in the car with him, but got off at my house; when I got home it was half-past nine; when I entered the room in which deceased was, I found there, besides myself, Mr. WELLS, my two daughters, an editor, Mr. Wilmot, a boarder, Mr. Hildreth, Miss Ellen McAuley, Mr. Wells, Mrs. Hays, a servant, and Mr. Towns; all these gentlemen and ladies, with the exception of the editor and the physicians, were members of my own house. Had every effort was made to save the deceased's life; but he died at twelve o'clock on Wednesday; there was a strange man found in my house at half-past twelve o'clock last night in the front parlor, where the body of the deceased lay; he viewed the body, took the cloth, and put it over his face; I, in chasing my dress at the time he entered, but when I came down into the sitting-room my girls were all terrified, and told me there was a strange man in the parlor; I immediately threw open the folding-doors, and asked him if he was the undertaker; he said "No;" I said, "Are you a friend?" he answered "Yes;" I called him toward me and he came; I asked him if he was a friend and questioned him; he said something about the jury which I did not understand and said he had called to take a last look upon the body, as he could not attend the funeral; he entered without the knowledge of my family; I, in the gas in the hallway, and looked at him, and I don't think he was sorely hurt; I saw him to the door and locked it after him.

By a JURYMAN—How did he know where the body was? A.—When he came in a couple of people who did not go to bed that night came down with the gas, and he said he wanted to view the body, and passed right up; they immediately followed me and told me of the matter; the man said he had been in the Academy of Music; I don't know his name.

MARY ETTA SNOW, sworn, said: I reside with last witness, who is my mother; I saw Mr. PANORMO just before he left the house; I was talking to him; he was speaking to Mr. WELLS about singing; about seven o'clock, in the sitting-room; I asked him if he would give me a lesson; he said he didn't time, as he had some lessons to give; I have been acquainted with him ever since he has been in my house; he taught me; never knew deceased to speak to me of any enemy; he had no enemies; I don't know of any enemy he had, or person who has threatened him; his conversation with me was always of a cheerful character; he never spoke of being in fear; he had a great many pupils; I don't think he had much money as he when he started; when he did come home he had $5 or $6 in his pocket-book, which I took from his pocket; I asked him where he got money; he said, "Good luck;" I didn't ask him any more; I thought he was with him when he came home; I was called to see him by my mother, and found one of the gas-burners turned up; I lighted the other; when I entered the room he was sitting on the sofa; his face was covered with blood; there was not a white spot on it; I ran to him and took off his hat-gloves, which were covered with blood; I found a small bit of paper in his hand; the white glove he held in his right hand; I asked him where he was robbed; he said, "I have been been attacked;" I asked him where; he said, "Down down south;" he did not say where; I ran out on my door-step and I thought he was going to faint, and a gentleman bathed his head, and in the meanwhile I sent another gentleman for the doctor; Mr. PANORMO died before the doctor had got to him, and I asked him where he had been at ticket, and he said in a Myrtle-avenue car by a man who asked him for a light, and who was accompanied by two others; he said he was "very the worse for liquor;" he said, "I gave him a light, and he said, 'The conductor didn't charge me;' I took off his cravat and collar, as he had great difficulty in breathing, and he seemed relieved; at that time the doctor came in and looked at the wound in the right side, and I observed at the same time in the eye; he kept saying that "it was in the eye;" he repeated it to the Police officer; I asked him if he knew the number of the car, he said "No;" I said, "Could you recognize the man?" he answered, "No, there were two ruffians;" I asked him where he was coming from, and he said, "Fred, No. 41 Cumberland-street;" he said he not did talk to him, as it was much as ought for him to converse; my mother and deceased were always on good terms; I never knew of any disturbance between them; he had several lady visitors at our house; they were strangers; I never observed any difference between them not the ordinary civilities; I looked in all his pockets for money, but there was none except what was found in his pocket-book, which I took from his pistol pocket; I always found his amiable, sober and refined in his habits; he left his watch, some two months ago, at the corner of Middagh and Hicks streets, to be repaired; he said there were a dozen persons in the car, but he seemed to be destitute, for he cried out every now and then, "Don't hit me so hard; don't hit me again."

Miss HATTIE FRENCH was examined. She said: I reside at No. 48 Smith-street, with my mother; I have been taking lessons from Prof. PANORMO; he called to give me a lesson on Tuesday night; he arrived at a quarter to eight, which was a late hour for him; he was in the habit of coming at six o'clock; I did not ask him what kept him so late; he never told me of having any difficulty with any one, with the exception of once, when he said he had some trouble with one of his pupils; Mr. BOWNE; he did not tell me what it was; he neither spoke of it in a trifling or serious manner, but he was coming to board at our house, and for some reason or another he stuck with Mrs. SNOW; my company tickets for the concert; I was about some tickets for his concert which I had sold; I gave him $4 50; he remained at our house, I should think, about three-quarters of an hour; he left from twenty minutes to half-past eight; he said he had two more lessons to give; he said one was in Atlantic-street, and the other in Cumberland-street; he never expressed any fear of going out; we pressed him to stay, but he wouldn't; in speaking of the difficulty with Mrs. SNOW's boarder, he did not express himself as though he was in fear of him; Mr. PANORMO always acted like a gentleman; I saw very little money in his possession at the time I paid him the $4 50; I only saw one $5 bill.

RACHEL ENNIS sworn, said: I reside at No. 89 Atlantic-street; I have been taking lessons from Prof. PANORMO for three quarters; he was at my house on Tuesday night at about half-past eight; he did not say what detained him; he was later than usual; he talk of absent-minded concert, and said he had to be particularly good spirits; he went away at ten minutes to nine; he did not say where he was going then.

The Police had not, at a late hour last evening, discovered any new facts in relation to the murder of Mr. PANORMO. Though Detective CARE was busily at work following up a supposed clue, Chief of Police CAMPBELL has taken the matter in hand, and personally superintends the labor of the officers of the Fourth Precinct. On the night of the assault upon Mr. PANORMO, Capt. POWERS and several of his men were engaged at the Democratic primary election in the Seventh Ward, in an effort to have WILLIAM POWERS, a brother of the Captain, returned as a member of the General Committee. It is regarded as a little singular that the Police of the Fourth Precinct should have suffered the attempt to rob Prof. VAN NORDORP, on De Kalb-avenue, near Fort Green-place, alluded to above—to pass unnoticed so long. It does not appear that any effort was made to discover the perpetrators of that outrage, though it is now shown at least two desperate characters and State prison birds lived in the precinct, and their haunts were known to the officers. If less attention were given to politics and more to Police duty, robberies and ruffianism would be of less frequent occurrence in Brooklyn.

ANOTHER BROOKLYN MURDER.

A Man Shot Dead by a Woman in Revenge for Alleged Seduction.

About 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, FANNY HYDE, aged eighteen years, residing at No. 20 Myrtle-avenue, shot and killed GEORGE W. WATSON, at his hair-dressing establishment, corner of South Eleventh and First streets, E. D. She immediately gave herself up to the Police, and her husband went to the station with her. It appears that WATSON, who boarded at No. 47 Wilson-street, occupied one floor of the four-story brick factory on the corner of South Eleventh and First streets, and was a manufacturer of silk nets for ladies' head-dress. FANNY HYDE had been in his employ for several years, and during that time they have been very intimate, she alleges that WATSON had ruined her. After this intercourse she says that WATSON visited her frequently, and on these occasions called her vile names, and taunted her with acts of degradation which he had forced her to commit. This treatment was continued after her marriage, and she finally resolved to put a stop to it. She told WATSON that he must not interfere with her, or she would tell her husband. He desisted for a time, and she worked away the same as other girls in the factory. On Thursday WATSON renewed his insults, and insisted upon her accompanying him into an adjoining room, and upon her refusing he threatened to discharge her. Yesterday morning, fearing violence at his hands, she brought a pistol, as she says, for the purpose of protecting herself. The quarrel was renewed, and FANNY begged WATSON to let her alone. He continued to insult her, and made use of offensive epithets, which so enraged her that she drew the pistol and shot him dead in the hall-way outside the shop door. Mrs. HYDE'S father, JOHN WIENLEY, was the first to find WATSON after the shot, and on seeing WATSON, who was also his employer, lying in a pool of blood, he exclaimed, "Fanny! Fanny!" FANNY frankly stated that she had shot WATSON, and added that, though she did not intend to kill him, she had good cause for doing so. She then sent for her husband, who is employed in APPLETON'S book manufactory, and when he arrived she requested him to go to the 20th Precinct Station and surrendered herself. HENRY HYDE, her husband, states that he has been married to his wife about two years. The deceased was a man about forty-five years of age, has a son nearly twenty and his family are in Boston. A jury was impaneled by Coroner WURTHWILL, who viewed the body and a permit was given for burial. The ball from FANNY'S pistol severed WATSON'S jugular vein and caused instant death.

Riotous Conduct on Board a Long Island Railroad Train.

On the eastern-bound train of the Long Island Railroad, which leaves Hunter's Point at 4 P. M., reaching Jamaica on Thursday evening, about a dozen laborers employed on STEWART'S new railroad got aboard at the train to go to Queens. On the conductor demanding their fares they refused to pay, and on his threatening to put them off the cars, they assaulted and beat him badly. The brakemen came to his assistance and was served in a similar manner. They then smashed the doors and windows of the car and cut the bell-rope. On the arrival of the train at Queens, the conductor succeeded in having four of them arrested. They gave their names as JOHN BUTLER, PATRICK BROGAN, TIMOTHY KILLINGER, and ALEXANDER KELLY. They were yesterday attained before Justice SNEDDEKER, at Jamaica, and sentenced to sixty days each in the County Jail. On being conveyed there by two constables, and when scarcely out of sight of the Court-room, BUTLER knocked one of the officers down, and effected his escape.

Tweed, Hall and Connolly.

The report which was published in an evening paper yesterday, to the effect that Mr. TWEED has left the City and is at Albany arranging with his political enemies so that he may be able to take his Senatorial seat, is incorrect; he was at his office in Duane-street up to 5½ o'clock yesterday. HALL was at his usual post in the City Hall, and CONNOLLY still remains quietly among his friends.

Announcement—M. Favarger's Dramatic Readings.

When we announced, a few days ago, the series of dramatic readings, in the French language, about to be commenced by M. A. A. FAVARGER, at Chickering Hall, we inadvertently referred to them as intended to occur in the evening. The readings, we ought to have said, are to take place, until further notice, every Friday morning, at 11½ o'clock, commencing on Friday next. They appeal, therefore, especially to students and admirers of the French language among the fair sex, by whom they may be attended, with equal pleasure and profit.

Gen. Grant and His Accusers.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The scorehoads like DANA accuse GRANT of nepotism. GRANT has stood where they were as much obliged to stand as he was. They shirked military duty; GRANT went to the field, and the country knows the result, and the nation will stand by him as it did through the rebellion, and DANA and Papa GREELEY may growl.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE INVESTIGATION.

Smoking Rooms—The Agent of the Bremen Line Admits Testifies as to Bribing Inspectors.

[The report of the proceedings during the day will be found on the fourth page.]

The whole of the evening sitting of the Committee was occupied in hearing the statement of Mr. SCHWAB, who testified to the frequency of bribing Inspectors in the Custom-house. He also said that it was their universal custom to demand three bottles of liquor per night for night work. He did not know whether this was their right or not, but Gen. STEWART said that Mr. MURPHY denied that such privilege had ever been accorded them.

EVENING SESSION.

At the opening of the evening session a letter was read from Mr. Secretary BOUTWELL, in reply to a communication from the Committee, transmitting Mr. D. B. WHITLOCK'S complaint of having been charged half storage for a cargo of goods imported in March, 1871 although they had not been removed from the ship. Mr. BOUTWELL said the statement of Mr. WHITLOCK was in the main correct, but the charge was a legal one and justified by paragraph, article 85, of the Revised Warehouse Regulations for 1869.

EVIDENCE OF GUSTAVE SCHWAB.

GUSTAVE SCHWAB, agent of the Bremen line of steam-ships, testified as follows:

By Mr. CASSERLY—I know Mr. WILLIAMS, of the Williams & Guion line of steam-ships. [Mr. CASSERLY read a portion of Mr. WILLIAMS' testimony in relation to festive Custom-house inspectors for facilitating the discharge of ships' cargoes.] The practice of paying Custom-house inspectors gratuities is by no means a new one. I have never seen such gratuities given, but I have known the practice to be one in use for twenty years. Sometime ago the Secretary of the Treasury issued a circular forbidding the practice. We then ceased to pay such gratuities, but I know Custom-house inspectors continue to receive them to this day. The reason is that the laws and regulations of the Custom-house are utterly inadequate to the commerce of this port. Commerce has increased from fifteen to twenty steamers a year to the same number a week; but the rules have not been altered in any particular. The gratuities are given to inspectors to induce them to modify these rules in our favor, and without this it would be almost impossible to conduct our business. By the letter of the law, we are compelled to discharge a steamer's cargo between sunrise and sunset; it would take eight days of such short ones as these to discharge a cargo, and this would compel an almost ruinous delay in the case of fast-sailing ships. A Customs officer can, without any violation of his duty, greatly facilitate the operation of the steam-ship companies; and while the fee increases his industry, and of course we expect it will smooth the way for getting the work done. As a matter of fact it does.

By Senator CASSERLY—It renders the inspectors discontented if they do not receive it. [The witness here stated at some length that, judging by experience, it was decidedly safer and more to the advantage of the Government to unload steamers at night, for the reason that then the gates of the wharfs are closed, and the crowds that during the day render the wharf a scene of confusion and disorder, are kept out, and there is no opportunity for stealing. He said that according to present regulations they were allowed to unload after sunset only by special permit.]

By Senator HOWE—Three bottles of liquor per day are allowed to each inspector. The witness could not state whether this was allowed by the regulations or not. Senator STEWART stated that he was not; and informed him that it was forbidden in the regulations.

At 11 o'clock the Committee adjourned until Wednesday morning, Jan. 31, at 10 o'clock A. M.

Letter from Gens. Porter and Babcock.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The following letter has been sent to Hon. WM. A. BUCKINGHAM, Chairman of the Senate Investigating Committee in session at New-York:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, Jan. 26, 1872.

SIR: In view of the facts that your names have been mentioned before your Committee in an attempt to implicate officers on duty in the Executive Mansion in a pecuniary connection with the New-York Custom-house, we respectfully request that you will not close the present investigation without ascertaining that we witnesses in relation to questions which may assist the Committee in its efforts to ascertain the truth.

We are, Sir, your obedient servants,

HORACE PORTER,
O. E. BABCOCK.

The Apportionment of Electors.

Alluding to the question which has been raised, whether the approaching Presidential election must be had by electors chosen according to the old apportionment of Representatives or according to the new Apportionment bill now pending in Congress, the Boston Advertiser says:

"The law of Congress passed March 1, 1792, settled the rule for such cases by providing in express terms that:

The electors * * * shall be equal to the number of senators and representatives to which the several states may be later entitled at the time when the President and Vice-President thus to be chosen should come into office. Provided always, that where no apportionment of Representatives shall have been made after any enumeration at the time of choosing electors; then the number of electors shall be according to the existing apportionment of Senators and Representatives."

Accordingly the Presidential elections of 1792, 1812, 1852 and 1861 were had according to the apportionments made under the censuses of 1790, 1810, 1850, and 1860; and the election of 1873 must be had according to the apportionment under the census of 1870, unless the passage of the Apportionment bill should be unduly delayed, in which case only must it be made under the existing apportionment. The act from which we have quoted is that which fixed the beginning

THE CONVICTED KUKLUX.

Kuklux Prisoners En Route for a Northern Prison—A Sorry-Looking Assembly.

The steamer Charleston arrived in this City last evening, from Charleston, S. C., having on board twenty-four convicted Kuklux prisoners, in charge of a detachment from the Eighteenth Infantry, under the command of First Lieut. Forrest. These prisoners were tried and convicted at the recent term of the United States Circuit Court, held at Columbia, S. C., and were on their way to the Albany Penitentiary. The sentences vary from one year to five, with fines from $100 to $1,000. They were confined in a bulkhead in the forward part of the ship, which had been temporarily fitted up for their accommodation. They were all apparently white men, but a more forlorn, woe-begone, haggard-looking crew could scarcely be found. All were furnished with gray blankets, which they wore in the manner of cloaks over the shoulders, fastened with strings. With one or two exceptions they bore upon their faces the stolid look of utter ignorance. The reporter was told that only one or two could read and write. Their rough, haggard faces, ragged garments and unkempt hair presented a singular spectacle seen by the dim light of the ship's lantern. Among the former was an old man, over sixty-five years of age, who is the head of a large family. He has received one of the heaviest sentences, viz: five years imprisonment and a fine of $1,000. They were taken on to Albany last evening. Their names and sentences are as follows:

Sher. Gibbons, conspiracy, eighteen months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

Hezekiah Porter, conspiracy, eighteen months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

William Montgomery, conspiracy, eighteen months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

Evans Murphy, conspiracy, eighteen months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

Robt. Hayes Mitchell, conspiracy, eighteen months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

Sylvanus Shearer, conspiracy, eighteen months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

Hugh H. Shearer, conspiracy, eighteen months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

James R. Shearer, conspiracy, eighteen months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

Henry Wachel, conspiracy, eighteen months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

Eli Ross Steward, conspiracy, eighteen months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

Thomas B. Whitesides, conspiracy, twelve months' imprisonment and $100 fine.

John W. Mitchell, five years' imprisonment and $1,000 fine.

Samuel G. Brown, five years' imprisonment and $1,000 fine.

Milton Cantrell, one year's imprisonment.

Charles Cantrell, eighteen months' imprisonment.

Stephen D. Splawn, two years' imprisonment and $50 fine.

Junius H. Tindall, one year's imprisonment.

James Estes, one year's imprisonment and $10 fine.

John L. Moore, eighteen months' imprisonment.

Alexander Bridges, one year's imprisonment.

Jones Vasser, one year's imprisonment and $10 fine.

THE MARKET SAVINGS BANK.

How the Funds of the Bank Were Lost—A Statement from the Receiver.

A prominent resident of Long Branch comes in the great censure in connection with the late defalcation of the Market Bank, by which so many poor people are impoverished.

Mr. DENNIS, the receiver, says that CONKLIN, the defaulter, was induced to purchase a place known as the West Farm by a person named BRITE, who is also a large borrower from the bank, through CONKLIN, on some worthless stock known as the Milwaukee and Minnesota Railroad stock. The directors say that CONKLIN has been made the dupe of several well-known sharpers, who have fleeced him right and left. A man named PATTERSON, well known in New-York, is also a borrower to the extent of $16,000 on Derby coal stock, which is not worth one-quarter the sum loaned on it.

It is also shown in the assets of the bank that CONKLIN had loaned the funds of the bank on other property at Long Branch, $10,000, to a Mr. BRITE; the records at Trenton showing that the place had already been covered with mortgages for more than its value before the $10,000 was procured on it. There is every reason to hope that the confederates of CONKLIN will soon be brought to justice, and made, if possible, to disgorge their ill-gotten gains. To them, as well as to CONKLIN, are the hundreds of poor people who have been robbed indebted for their loss.

The following statement was last night received from Mr. DENNIS, the receiver of the Market Bank:

The Emigrant Savings Bank.

The Directors of the Emigrant Savings Bank desire to say that in the report of their assets published in yesterday's TIMES the small amount of Georgia and Tennessee bonds are put down at their market and not at their par value. Also that the number of depositors is 23,391, so that their average deposits of each individual is about $461. Also that call loans and loans on stock or personal securities are strictly prohibited by the trustees of this bank. No loans of any kind are made except on bond and mortgage to the extent of forty per cent. of the value of the property. Every other investment is in the absolute purchase of the securities allowed by law.

Third-Avenue Savings Bank.

The run upon the Third-avenue Savings Bank visibly diminished yesterday. About $37,000 was drawn out. Public confidence is evidently returning to this establishment. The majority of the depositors yesterday only drew part of their deposits. No crowding or disturbance was observed during the day, and all the depositors who presented themselves were paid.

Judge Bedford's Grand Jury.

The Court of General Sessions, which adjourned on Thursday, will meet today, when it is asserted in official quarters that the Grand Jury will bring in a large number of indictments against persons who have been concerned in the municipal frauds. As soon as the indictments are handed in, active steps will be taken by the Court in the matter. It is said that among those against whom indictments are likely to be presented will be found men whose names have not hitherto been prominently brought before the public.

The Illicit Whisky Distilleries in Brooklyn.

By an arrangement recently made between THOMAS KINSELLA, member of Congress from the Second District, and Commissioner DOUGLASS, of the Internal Revenue Department, the business of the illegal distillation of whisky in Brooklyn will be entirely done away with. The Police authorities of this city are to guarantee protection to the Federal officials in the discharge of their duty, and to this end the revenue officers are to be reinforced and co-operate with the Police. Mr. E. T. WOOD, formerly Collector of Internal Revenue, but now counsel for the indicted whisky distillers, has agreed to the compromise.

A Pennsylvania Bill for Senators.

The Philadelphia Press publishes the following:

"The Auditor-General has very properly refused to pay the modest little bill of $40,000, presented for repairs and decorations on the halls of the Senate and House of Representatives at Harrisburg, until the items are approved by the Finance Committee of the Legislature. The report that Twaddle has been in Harrisburg originated in the presentation of this bill."

DON'T ENCOURAGE SMUGGLING.—The excessive duty (fifty to sixty per cent.) on silk umbrellas has greatly encouraged the smuggling of this class of goods. Messrs. ISAAC SMITH'S SON & CO., No. 464 Broadway, in order to compete with those who are able to smuggle silk reduction of not less of silk umbrellas. They had greatly encouraged in making this reduction, by a remnant of customers, that now, with any inclination, may be purchased here at quite as low a price as the smuggled goods.—Evening Mail.

From Twenty-thirty data it has been estimated that at least one-fourth of all persons born in the United States have, at birth, lungs in a tuberculous condition, and in consequence are predisposed to pulmonary complaints; yet it is equally well established that this predisposition need not end in consumption, asthma, or any other lung disease, if due care and watchfulness be observed, and all exciting causes promptly treated as they arise. It is in just such cases Dr. D. JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT exercises its most beneficial effects, and has produced the largest proportion of its cures. Besides promptly removing coughs and colds, which, when left to themselves are the most common cause of tuberculous development, the EXPECTORANT allays any inflammation which may exist, and by promoting easy expectoration cleanses the lungs of the substances which clog them up, and which rapidly destroy when suffered to remain. Sold everywhere.

THE GALLOWS.

Execution of George Botts, the Murderer of Halstead.

The Scene at Newark Jail Yesterday—Last Hours of the Condemned—How He Passed the Night—He Quiet and Repent-ant Demeanor—The End.

From an early hour yesterday morning the idle and the curious began to gather around the walls of Newark Jail, and a cordon of Police was drawn around the entrance. Those who had tickets admitting them to the interior of the prison, had to struggle through the crowd till the line was passed and the gateway gained, where two or three of the officials received the privileged visitor and conducted him to the office. By 10 o'clock the large hall in which the dreadful scene was to be enacted, had become crowded to an almost inconvenient degree and the galleries in front of the four tiers of cells were fully occupied. Ropes had been stretched across the hall, keeping the crowd back from the gallows at the north end of it, and the way clear from the cell of the condemned to the last spot on which he should stand on earth. A number of deputy sheriffs guarded these ropes, and used the long black staves they carried in keeping within bounds the mere boisterous of the mob. There was much talking and some little confusion, consequent on the strenuous efforts occasionally made by the sight-seers to obtain a good view, and it is discreditable to humanity to have to record that an entire absence of the decorum due to so solemn an occasion was painfully conspicuous.

THE LAST HOURS.

Above the noise of the crowd in the hall, the hymn "Jesus Shall Wash my Sins Away," could occasionally be heard. The last religious service Botts was ever to take part in was then in progress in his cell. Chaplain Wren and Rev. Mr Siegfried were there, as was John Botts, the brother of the condemned. The faithful Mr. Flavell was also with him, and had not left his side since the previous evening.

Botts did not pass the night easily. About midnight he requested permission to view the gallows, and leaving his cell for that purpose, briefly surveyed the instrument of death, and immediately turning away, walked up and down the hall a short time, conversing with Warden Johnson. After this he returned, and lay down without undressing. At 2 o'clock he awoke and began to speak on religious subjects. From this hour till the final moment, Botts devoted himself almost uninterruptedly to the most fervent preparation for death. He prayed frequently and long, gave his keepers each some little article as a souvenir, and requested one of them to get him a black neck-tie. About 9 he ate a light breakfast, and shortly after was joined by his spiritual advisers and his brother. All engaged in prayer and devout exercises till 11, when Sheriff Pickwell held a consultation with Dr. Siegfried, at which it was decided to carry out the sentence of the law at 12½.

PREPARING FOR THE END.

A few moments before the index had marked this hour, two Deputy Sheriffs entered the cell and pinioned the condemned. He submitted with patient resignation, and Chaplain Wren holding his trembling hand, whispered the assurances of Divine mercy to the wretched man, and supported him at this trying moment with those spiritual consolations which we must all earn to when all that is earthly has been swept from under us. The preparations being complete, the arms tied at the elbows, the noose loosely tied and the black cap placed on the head, the procession prepared to start on the fatal passage. The opening of the cell door announced its coming, and a profound silence fell upon the expectant crowd. It was the sudden hush of dumb suspense which strikes a feeling of awe to those who are within its influence. Another moment and the sorrowful cortège appeared. All eyes were instantly and almost painfully concentrated on the wretched man who headed it.

BOTTS' APPEARANCE.

John Botts was a tall and powerful man. He stood six feet two inches in height, and had once been stout in proportion, but weeks of confinement and anxiety had worn him almost to skin and bone. He was dressed in the same clothes he wore on the trial. His step, as he passed from the cell to the gallows, was unsteady, and no eye in that hall could gaze upon the doomed man without emotion. Beside him, and still holding his hand, walked Chaplain Wren, and probably never in his long religious experience had he before spoken to a man who, while yet walking the earth, seemed to be so far removed from it. Botts' face was that of one who saw nothing around him; it was the look of one whose gaze is fixed on futurity, and yet hesitates to make the dreadful leap. The halter hung around his neck, seemingly a small cord to kill so large a man, and as he took his place under the gallows, the Sheriff, pale and nervous almost as the condemned man, slipped the end of it into the hook, and Deputy Sheriff Davis drew out the death warrant.

Mr. Siegfried here turned to the people assembled, and in a loud voice said that in behalf of George Botts he thanked all who had done him kindness, and especially the Wardens of this prison. He forgave his enemies, and trusted in the redeeming mercy of his Creator for the forgiveness of his sins.

During the reading of the warrant a death-like silence reigned in the hall, the paper shook in the hands of the reader, and it was with difficulty he could command himself to the closing words. Chaplain Wren still shook the hand of the condemned, speaking in a subdued tone the words of mercy, being answered by an occasional low murmur, almost a groan, from the victim.

THE END.

At the conclusion of the reading Sheriff Pickwell stepped up and grasped the hand of Booth, while the knot was adjusted under the left ear and the cap pulled over the face. Then he stepped back, and the most terrible moment of the whole scene came. It took but an instant for the Sheriff to step behind the little black screen where the fatal spring was to be touched, but that instant seemed an age. Many turned away from the sight, or closed their eyes to it. Another second, and the spring was pressed, the enormous weight below was pushed from its balance, and the body of George Botts was thrown five feet into the air.

His death was comparatively easy. The struggles were but slight, for the man had apparently so nearly reached death through nervous prostration, that there was no fight for life. After a few convulsive contractions of the legs and arms, the body extended itself and there it all appeared to rest. The usual heaving of the chest was all that gave sign of vitality still lingering. A group of physicians were standing behind the gallows, and one of these stepping forward felt the pulse of the dying man, who had then hung about two minutes. The pulse of Botts did the same, and timed the beats with their watches. For four minutes it beat 70 and 72, rose to 108, then to 116; at the seventh it had fallen to 48, and then became irregular; at the eleventh minute the beats were barely perceptible, and at the fourteenth the physicians pronounced life extinct. They accounted for the unusual duration of vital action by the fact that the knot, slipping slightly from its place, had failed to compress the carotid artery, thus allowing the blood a comparatively free passage through one of its most important channels.

After hanging about half an hour, the centre of a group of eager surgeons and others, the body was lowered into its coffin. The coffin plate was simply inscribed:

GEORGE BOTTS,
Aged 25 years.

An examination of the body was subsequently made by the surgeons, when it was found that death had been caused by strangulation, the neck not being broken. The face of the dead was not more contracted than would naturally follow from strangulation. It was perfectly calm and calm in expression. After the remains had been viewed by the prisoners in the jail, they were given in charge to the brother of the deceased, who at once removed them to Boonton, N. J., where they will be interred. Among those present at the execution was said to be a son of Gen. Halstead, the murdered man.

On Thursday, Botts gave to a friend a book called Thoughts for Weary Hours, in which he desired him to write the following inscription, and present it to his mother:

Dear, kind, loving mother, accept this little volume, which has cheered me in many a weary hour. It may serve to make light your burden in the way, by reminding you that I had as much heart-felt peace as it has in me, and may we both meet each other at the feet of Jesus. Your affectionate son,

GEORGE.

THE MURRAY-COULTER CASE.

The Jury Discharged and are Discharged—A Majority in Favor of the Defendant Coulter—The Probable End of the Litigation.

The case of Murray against Coulter, involving the right to the Justiceship of the Yorkville Police Court, which during a protracted trial of nearly five weeks had wearied the patience of Judge, jury, and counsel, was brought to a close yesterday by a disagreement of the jury. Throughout the trial the evidence was of the most conflicting character, each side producing witnesses to testify to frauds perpetrated by the other in counting of the votes and making the formal returns. At the opening of the Court yesterday, the jury were brought in and questioned by Judge Brady, as to the possibility of their coming to an agreement. In reply, the foreman said they had canvassed the testimony in the case most thoroughly, but had failed to agree, and at the possibility of an agreement there was none. As the Judge, thereupon, after compliimenting the jurors on the patience and diligence they had exhibited during the protracted trial, discharged them from the further consideration of the case. In return, the jury complimented the Judge for the disposition he had shown to shorten their labors during the progress of the case, and the aid he had given them in their endeavors to disentangle the truth from the immense mass of conflicting testimony presented before them. When it again became their fate, they said, to be summoned on a jury, they hoped it would be in his Honor's Court. It was stated that the jury when discharged, stood seven in favor of the defendant, Coulter, against four for the plaintiff, Murray, the twelfth juror having been previously discharged on account of sickness.

This doubtless puts an end to this litigation, as it is hardly possible that the plaintiff will again undergo the great expense of a second trial, with the risk of a similar disagreement of the jury or a verdict against him. The case of Stremmler against McGuire, involving the right to the civil Justiceship of the same district is also practically disposed of by the result of the Murray-Coulter suit, as both depended on the same testimony, and involved the same issues of fraud.

SAILORS' WRONGS.

The Law for the Protection of Seamen Against the Extortions of Sailors' Boarding-House Keepers to be Rigorously Enforced.

There never was a fight between honesty and fraud in which the lines were more sharply drawn than in that which has been going on for many years between the friends of the sailor in this City and his greatest enemies, the keepers of sailors' boarding-houses. On one side are arrayed humanity and the law of the land; on the other, unscrupulous rapacity and defiance of the State. Of course under the régime that until last November had the City under its heel, the latter had it all its own way; but since the overthrow of the Ring there seems to be a hope of reform in the treatment of sailors on shore. Vigorous measures have recently been adopted to secure this end, and it looks as if nothing could prevent its attainment.

The law for the protection of seamen passed in 1865 by the Legislature of this State has been up to the present time to all intents and purposes a dead letter. It provides, among other things, for licensing sailors' boarding-houses, placing in the hands of a Board of Commissioners, composed of gentlemen of high standing, the power of withholding or revoking licenses where those seeking or holding them were unjust to the sailor. For the first year after the law passed the boarding-house keepers, with few exceptions, took out licenses, but in the second year all refused to comply with the terms of the act. At this time A. Oakey Hall was District-Attorney. The sailors' boarding-house keepers wielded an immense political influence. They could furnish any required number of votes to order in the Fourth and seventh Wards, whenever Tammany said the word. Wm. M. Tweed counted upon them in an emergency, and their efforts were largely instrumental in overthrowing Fernando Wood whenever he came up for election to the State Senate. Of course, District-Attorney Hall could not find time to try one or two indictments which were found against the men who defrauded the sailors. But only one or two cases were ever permitted to go so far as to attain the indictment stage. When arrests were made under the lax rule the Police Justices in many cases discharged the accused and reprimanded the officers who arrested them. Last year Capt. Duncan was made President of the Board of Commissioners. He went among the keepers of sailors' boarding houses and held talk with them. They mock him and the law at defiance. He had about fifty of them arrested at various times, but found it impossible to bring them to trial. On various pretexts they were discharged, and finally he was compelled to abandon all effort to enforce the law as matters then stood.

The late great awakening of the people to the stupendous evils of Tammany rule, resulting in the overwhelming defeat of the Ring in November, gave new heart to the men engaged in looking after the interests of the defrauded sailors. The Commissioners felt inspired anew, and said that the opportunity for reform had presented itself. They felt that the politicians would not dare to brush them away as they had done before. Capt. Duncan saw Superintendent Kelso and told him what he wanted. The Superintendent entered heartily into the matter. His men, just before Christmas, published all the sailors' boarding-house keepers that they must get licenses and submit to the law. Capt. Duncan, accompanied by Detective Doyle, an efficient officer, on the 4th, 5th and 6th of the present month, visited all the boarding-house keepers again and notified them that the law would be carried out. In some instances they were received with jeers and defiance, but in others they were treated courteously. The result has been, that thus far about half of these men have taken out licenses. The other half—about fifty in number—still refuse to obey the law, and are said to have formed a combination to resist it. After giving the recusant ones a sufficient time to consider the matter, Capt. Duncan took proceedings against them. Complaints have been entered against them all, and within the past few days many of them have been arrested and taken before Justice Dowling, at the Tombs, by whom they were held to await the action of Judge Benedict's Grand Jury. There can be little doubt that indictments will be speedily found against these men, and their long career of crime and impunity will be suddenly brought to a close. It is the intention of the Commissioners relentlessly to drive the bad boarding-house keepers out of the business, and to protect those who treat the sailors justly. Meanwhile the Harbor Police are enforcing the section of the law which forbids runners to visit vessels in the Harbor without permission.

The Jumel Ejectment Suit.

In the Jumel ejectment suit, yesterday, in the United States Circuit Court, Catherine R. Williams, an old resident of Providence, R. I., was called for the plaintiff. She testified that she was eighty-three years of age, and for fifty-three years just had been engaged in writing biographical, theological and historical works; she had contributed papers to several magazines and periodicals on these subjects, and was familiar with the records of her native town; she had known the plaintiff from boyhood, and when he lived in the family of Major Ballou; there was a striking resemblance in the boy to Mme. Jumel, with whom she was also intimately acquainted. She testified that when Mme. Jumel lived in Providence in April she was known as Betsey Bowen. Mrs. Williams was closely cross-examined by Mr. O'Conor, but adhered to the main points of her testimony. Extracts from affidavits made by the defendant, Chase, were read by counsel for the plaintiff, in which Chase stated that Mme. Jumel had told him her parents' names were Cobb and Fenton Bowen. Joseph Perry testified that he was a playfellow of the plaintiff when the latter was a boy in the family of Major Ballou; that during that time a lady frequently called there, and told the children they must be good boys, and that the plaintiff was one of them; in after years she visited the house; he saw the lady in New-York and recognized her as Mme. Jumel. At the conclusion of the witness' testimony the Court adjourned till Monday next at 11 o'clock.

A Singular Homicide in Avenue C—A Death From a Shot in the Knee.

On the 17th of December last, an affray occurred in the saloon No. 261 Avenue C, which has resulted in the death of one of those engaged. It appears that John Murphy, a boatman, and James Larkin, a laborer, were in the saloon, both intoxicated, and soon got into an angry altercation about some trivial matter which none of the witnesses could remember. Larkin was leaning forward on a glass table, during the dispute, when Murphy drew from under him a pistol, and fired. It was at first supposed that no injury had been done, and Larkin went away, but Murphy finally discovered that the bullet had struck him in the knee. Murphy paid no attention to the wound until after several days, when he went to Bellevue Hospital. The surgeons there decided that amputation of the thigh was necessary, and the operation being followed by pyæmia, sank until Sunday last, when he died. Coroner Herman held an inquest in the Jury yesterday, when the facts were detailed to the jury, and a verdict was rendered that the death had been caused by a pistol-shot recklessly and maliciously fired by James Larkin. A warrant was issued by the Coroner for the arrest of the accused.

WITH THE WINDS.

A Visit to the Signal Service Bureau—On the Roof of the Equitable—How the Weather Reports are Made Out.

Uncle Sam's forethought in establishing a Signal Service Corps was greeted at first with much derision, and the amiable writers of Democratic journals harangued against this new proof of the wanton extravagance of Grant's Administration. It had, however, been hardly established before its value was practically demonstrated, for storms were foretold with an accuracy which to unscientific minds seems little short of the marvelous. Along the seaboards of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and throughout the lake region, it became speedily understood that captains who neglected the warnings of its flags endangered the safety of their vessels and cargoes. Consequently it became an understood unwritten law that those who objected to such "foolery," and knew more about the winds and weather than all the bureaus of the earth put together, would have to resign their commands to others who, though less gifted by nature in weather wisdom, were more willing to learn from science.

ON THE ROOF.

A reporter of the Times visited the signal station, perched upon the roof of the Equitable Insurance Building. He found the staff busily engaged writing in the office on the sixth floor, and on communicating his desire to see the working of the system, was immediately welcomed and requested to ascend to the roof. This is of mansard construction, and the ornamentation rises up in a variety of designs. But in the centre, at an elevation of 150 feet above the sea level, is the little observatory. It is built in such a manner as to make the temperature within the same as without. The instruments are few and simple. First there are two thermometers, one showing the minimum, the other the maximum degree. This is done by a very simple and ingenious process. In the tube in contact with the mercury is a small glass rod, to which a hair is fastened. When the mercury sinks in one it takes the rod with it, but if it subsequently rises the rod does not rise, but remains stationary. And in the other thermometer, which shows the maximum, the rod is pushed up to its highest point by the ascending fluid, and left there like a high-tide mark. Next to these is a wet-bulb thermometer, or, to speak more accurately, an hygrometer, which marks the amounts of moisture in the air. The next is a large three-foot mercurial barometer. These are all in the interior. Outside, on the top of the observatory, is a high rod something like a lightning conductor. On the top of this is a peculiar vane, consisting of four hollow half balls of brass, very suggestive of punch-ladles in appearance. This vane moves freely on a pivot, and as the wind rises it twirls the balls round with such velocity as to present the likeness of a brass ring. Beneath the pivot is a dial plate, which marks the velocity in tenths and hundredths of a mile. This is the anemometer, the instrument whose practical value is now so fully appreciated by shipping men.

Reporter—What do you consider a dangerous wind?

Signal-man—A velocity of twenty-five miles per hour is considered dangerous, but we do not hoist the flags that foretell dangerous winds until we receive orders from Washington. You saw how fast the anemometer revolved. I presume that the wind has a present velocity of thirty-five miles per hour, but it is not continuous. It comes only in gusts, and then dies away. Look now, and you will see that the vane is slackening, and in a few seconds will probably stop.

Reporter—Why are you forced to wait for orders from Washington?

Signal-man—Because the Bureau is there, and all the telegrams from the various stations come there and are compared. Six times a day we take observations, and three of these we transmit to Washington by telegram. The other signal offices do the same. The hours are at 7:47 A. M., 7:47 P. M., and midnight. We have telegraphed the observations taken at 7:47 A. M., and I presume the authorities do not consider that the wind is sufficiently dangerous to warrant the hoisting of cautionary flags. If such order we should have them up in an instant on those two flag-staffs in the front of the building. The flag is a red color with a square of black in the centre. But here in New-York there are so many flag-staffs that there might be some confusion, so we adopt the swivel that we hoist three red balls call it the storm drum, but the true signals are the flags.

Reporter—What do you hoist at night time?

Signal-man—Two common ship's laterns—red of course. A grand patented affair, very complicated and expensive, was sent to us from the Department, but it did not answer; so we fell back upon the old masthead lantern.

Up there on the roof, with the wind howling about the decorations, was a situation rather uncomfortable, to say nothing of its chilliness. But it had its charms; for the panorama of New-York spread out before the eyes was simply magnificent. The rivers, with their shipping, their forests of masts, their bustling tugs and huge ferry-boats looking in the distance like water-beetles; the streets, filled with moving figures, and vehicles whose roar at that height was subdued to a faint murmur; the bees swarming; the distant Staten Island and New-Jersey; the tranquil Bay, with huge foreign steamers gliding onward, all formed a picture that reconciled the reporter to even a greater degree of cold and to fiercer blasts. But the signal-man had seen it before, and was not so delighted, so after patiently waiting for some minutes, he proposed an adjournment to the office below, and an inspection of the weather maps.

These were headed, "War Department Weather Map, Signal Service U. S. A., Division of Telegrams and Reports for the Benefit of Commerce." On this a map is printed every day in the hours when the observations are telegraphed to Washington. This station is furnished with these maps in blank, handsomely printed in green and white, and having the names of all the signal stations in the Department, extending from San Francisco in the West, Portland, Maine, and Port Dalhousie, Canada, in the North, to Galveston and Key West in the South. The Department in Washington furnishes the telegrams from the other stations, and here in New-York they paint them in, having an iron plate with blank spaces corresponding to the towns where observations are taken. The substance of the telegrams is rendered by the following marks: A plain circle indicates clear weather, the same with a dark transverse bar denotes fair, a circle filled in with green color means cloudy, a plain circle containing an R means rain, one with an inner S stands for snow, and an arrow piercing through the circle denotes the wind. Then come the barometrical and other observations in figures, the first figures show the reading of the thermometer; the next the barometrical pressure, and the last the velocity of wind per hour. In the map furnished for Thursday, 7:47 A. M., New-York has a clear circle transfixed by an arrow flying to the east, denoting clear weather and westerly wind. The thermometer was at 30°; the barometer indicated a pressure of 30.05 and the wind had a velocity of fifteen miles an hour. At the same time in Key West there was clear weather, with a bracing north-east wind going sixteen miles an hour; but the thermometer was at 69°. At Kingston, Canada, the thermometer was down to 10°, with Canada gay wind, but cloudy weather. At Buffalo there was snow, and a high wind moving twenty-nine miles an hour. The snow extended as far as Shreveport, where the thermometer was at 36°. Beyond, Cheyenne, a terrible snowstorm was raging, and telegraphic communication was stopped. There was then in New-York a strong probability of a high wind, but not sufficiently so to be dangerous to shipping.

The gentlemen who take these observations are enlisted men, private soldiers of the United States Army. In each station there is a party of three, under the charge of a Sergeant. They receive the usual amount of pay, but instead of rations, clothing, bedding, &c., get commutation money, which amounts to quite a comfortable sum. They live altogether in the rooms adjacent to the office, cooking their food in quite an independent bachelor fashion. It must be rather a queer sensation for them when the great iron doors below are fastened, and they are left alone up in the garrets of the building. But soldiers acquire a stolidity and indifference to circumstances which are almost heroic, and will browse with the same easy nonchalance in a palace or a hovel, in the centre of the Colorado, or on top of the biggest tyrannoid.

Fatal Street-Car Accident.

A colored man in attempting to jump on the front platform of Car No. 123, Seventh-avenue line, at Thompson and Prince streets, yesterday morning, slipped and fell under the wheels, which passed over him killing him almost instantly. The body was taken to the Eighth Precinct Station-house to await an inquest, and James Patton, the driver, was arrested. The body was subsequently identified as that of Isaiah Lawrence, of No. 112 Thompson-street, and the evidence at the inquest showing the affair to be purely unmixed with an accident the driver was discharged by the Coroner.

More Gold Samples from Manitoba.

From the St. Paul (Minn.) Press, Jan. 22.

We learn by a gentleman who arrived from Manitoba last night that great excitement exists in that Province over advices recently received from old miners in the Peace River District, 600 miles north-west of Fort Edmonton. Following up the theory of Sir Roderick Murchison that where fine gold is found on the bars of large streams, the auriferous metal might be traced to a source from whence it could be procured in a coarser form, the miners claim that they have experienced a practical proof of its correctness, and that they are realizing from $5 to $10 per day. The difficulty of procuring provisions so as to remove the gold, which is the greatest obstacle. However, such obstacle will be considerably removed by the proposed opening up of navigation on Lakes Winnepeg and Manitoba, and the Saskatchewan River, for which waters the Hudson's Bay Company are now building four steamers on Red River. A large number of prospectors start for Peace River in the Spring.

SOLD AT LAST.

The Property on the New-York Printing Company Under the Sheriff's Hammer—It is Bought for $102,000.

Yesterday morning the Sheriff's sale of the property of the New-York Printing Company took place under the hammer of Mr. Reuben Fenn, the Sheriff's auctioneer. It was intended to begin the sale by disposing of the Duane-street property of the Company, but when the Deputy-Sheriff, Mr. Burns, and the auctioneer arrived there they found the doors closed, and the keys could not be found. Some one in the crowd suggested that "Tweed had 'em." At all events the officers and about fifty others proceeded to the type-foundry of the Company, at the corner of Franklin and Centre, and opened the sale. The machinery, including moulds, furnaces, and other materials, were sold to Mr. Bruce, the type manufacturer, for $5,100. The type metal was then put up and knocked down to Mr. G. A. Poole for thirteen and a half cents per pound, but a dispute arising among the bidders—some of them asserting that they had made higher bids than that figure—it was again put up and sold to Mr. Poole for twenty cents per pound.

The officers and bidders next visited the premises occupied by the Company in Twelfth-street, near Third-avenue. The property found there was sold to Mr. Poole for $40,000. It consisted of Adams' presses, a portion of a book-bindery, some tables, and machinery. The sale was somewhat delayed at this place, owing to the disappearance of a number of valuable books which had been left at the place for binding. They were the property of some of the principal publishers of the City. The Sheriff's officers, who were in charge of the premises for some days prior to the sale, could not explain where the books were or how they were taken away.

The property in Duane-street was next sold, the doors of the premises being open on the return of the officers. It consisted of four old presses and some other stock, the balance of the property left after the sale which was made on Jan. 5. It was knocked down for $1,800. The total proceeds of the sale amounted to $102,000.

Reform in the Register's Office.

Gen. Sigel has referred some of the points presented in Mr. Peter Cooper's correspondence relative to reform in the Register's office, to counsel, who are instructed to make a thorough examination of the alleged prevailing abuses, and report the result of their investigation without delay. He says that since he assumed the duties of the Registership he has been busily engaged in acquiring a full knowledge of the business of the office, and the manner in which it has heretofore been conducted, with a view to making every possible improvement for the benefit of the public. In regard to the unreasonable exaction of excessive fees, Gen. Sigel says his counsel will make a careful examination of the matter, and decide whether the figures in Mr. Cooper's letter are correct. Until a report is made by his legal advisers, Gen. Sigel will take no action in the matter. He is desirous that every reform in the business of the office be made with due caution, so that it will not only be beneficial to the public, but in accordance with the law as well.

PENNSYLVANIA POLITICS.

Meeting of the Republican State Committee—Call for a Convention.

The members of the Pennsylvania Republican State Central Committee met in Harrisburg, on Thursday, every county in the State, with the exception of two, being represented. After a full interchange of opinion the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the Chairman be directed to issue a call for a State Convention, equal in numbers to the representation in both Houses of the Legislature, to meet in Harrisburg, on Wednesday, the 17th day of March, to nominate candidates for Governor, supreme Court Judge, Auditor-General (should the Legislature authorize the election of one), an electoral ticket, and to elect four State at Large Delegates and delegates to represent the State in the Republican National Convention.

Resolved, That this Committee desires to urge upon the Republican voters of the Fourth Senatorial District the great importance of the special election for Senator in that district on the 30th inst. Upon the result of that election depends the political complexion of the Senate, and the continuance of life by the death of Mr. Connell, and the Republicans of the entire State are looking with deep interest to the maintenance of the integrity of the Republican organization in that district in the support of the regular Republican nominee, Henry W. Gray.

A Dog Which Does Not Forget an Injury.

From the Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard, Jan. 25.

There is a large Newfoundland dog in this city, about ten years old, which is doubtless one of the most knowing specimens of the canine family living. When it was about six months of age, a couple of young men, in order to have a little fun, tied a tin kettle to its tail and sent it running through the streets. It was sport for the boys, but the act was never forgotten by the dog. Till this day it shows signs of displeasure at the sight of either of those young men. One of them removed from the place, and several years after the tin kettle affair he was visiting in the city, and called at the residence of the dog's owner. The dog hearing the voice of the young man inside the house, resorted to a number of devices to gain admission. Upon being admitted, he showed his displeasure by snapping with jaws extended. The family interfered, of course, and the dog was removed from the house. From that day (when the kettle was tied to its tail) to this, neither of those young men can enter the gate leading to the house if the dog is at home. On one occasion a beggar came to the back door for something to eat, and was plentifully supplied by the good lady of the house. While passing out through the yard, the beggar threw away some of the food, the dog saw it, and, taking the unthankful solicitor of alms by the leg of his pantaloons, walked him hurriedly out through the gate. No beggar is permitted by that dog to enter the gate since. A negro once kicked this dog, and it has had such a dislikine for all persons of color since, that not one, with its permission, is allowed on the premises. A few years since the owner of the dog was taken sick and died. The dog was most deeply affected by the event, and refused to be comforted for many days and was in the cellar. When the bell was rung for the funeral the dog seemed to understand its mournful import, and from that day to this the tolling of the bell causes the dog to break forth in most dismal wailings.

The Dexter Club Reception.

The sixth reception of the Dexter Club took place on Wednesday evening last, at the residence of Mrs. H. B. Lyons, No. 49 West Twenty-fourth-street. The elegant parlors were filled with a select company, among whom were the following: The hostess, Mrs. H. B. Lyons, attired in a dark green silk poplin, en train, with trimmings of black velvet; Miss Zora Chamberlain, green silk train, with white lace overskirt; Miss Juliet M. Clinch, in black silk, en train, with trimmings of white Swiss; Miss Estelle Thompson, in green striped silk, with trimmings of lace; Miss Mary Pollock, in black moire, with white Swiss overskirt, en basque; Miss Emma Brown, in blue silk train, with overskirt of the same; Mrs. William Tealing, black silk; Miss Sarah Haughton, in lavender silk poplin, en train, trimmed with cherry-colored silk; Mrs. James Lewis, in black silk; Miss Carrie Reeves, drab-colored silk; Mrs. Joseph Brodie, in black silk; Miss Annie Reeves, blue silk; Mrs. Joseph F. Clinch, in brown silk poplin; Miss Jennie Armstrong, brown silk, with black lace overskirt, and the Misses Fannie Vought and Tillie Saulpaugh, the former in white Swiss, with pink tarlaton trimmings, and the latter in black silk, with corn-colored tarlaton overskirt. Mr. Edward Chamberlain, Mr. John Marion Pollock, Gen. Fitch, Mr. L. C. Bruce, Mr. Frank M. Clinch, Mr. Henry Brown, Mr. Henry E. Decker, Mr. Baker, Mr. Lee, Mr. Robert Armstrong, Mr. William Temple, Mr. Frank Mack, Mr. McKay, Mr. Eugene Allen Bert, Mr. Pepper, Mr. C. Haughton, and Dr. A. F. Merrill.

Wonderful Presence of Mind in a Woman.

A correspondent writing from Pittsburg, Penn., gives the following account of a singular accident which occurred in that city about 7 o'clock on Tuesday morning last:

"A freight-train ran off the track, near the corner of Grant-street and Seventh-avenue, and demolished a dwelling in which Mrs. Reagan and her three children were sleeping. Mrs. Reagan heard the crash and realized the extreme danger of the man, and realized that the house was in danger. A lamp was burning on the other side of the room, and the first thought Mrs. Reagan had was of the lamp, and of the danger of explosion and fire if the house should fail. With remarkable presence of mind she seized her babe in her arms, sprang out of bed, ran to the lamp and extinguished it; then she ran down stairs, and had just reached the foot of the stairs when the car struck the house and completely shattered the end and side, throwing the whole building into a mass of ruins. Mrs. Reagan and her babe were buried in the debris, the entire second floor, except a portion upheld by the back wall of the house, falling over them. They were protected by the floor falling upon portions of the wreck, which kept it from falling directly upon them. The child was not hurt, but mother suffered severely from bruises, but no serious injury. The other children were sleeping on the second floor, one side of which fell to the ground. They rolled against the wheels of the car that had caused all the ruin, and were uninjured.

HYDROPHOBIA.

Speculations as to Its Origin—Is it Ever Spontaneously Developed in the Human Body?

From the Philadelphia Ledger, Jan. 26.

It is some time since we have noted any of the customary paragraphs relating to cases of hydrophobia from one-bite, five, ten, twenty, or even forty years old. We have long suspected that this was a vulgar error. More than a year ago, we examined carefully the record of a case of hydrophobia in the Philadelphia Medical Times of this city. It was reported by one of our most eminent physicians. He ascribes the case unhesitatingly to a dog-bite. But as we said in our notice of it, there was a singular want of proof that the patient had ever been bitten by a dog or any other animal. No indication of it in his own statement could we find on his passage. We have long hoped that our medical practitioners would do something to rescue this disease from the domain of popular superstition and accepted tradition. We find in a Western journal an account of a lecture delivered by Dr. James B. Whittaker, of Cincinnati, on a case of hydrophobia arising in the city, in which it seems that there was no proof or even pretense that the cause was a dog-bite. We ourselves believe that the cases ascribed to ancient dog-bites might as well be ascribed to ancient mosquito-bites, or any other circumstance of the long preceded the attack. The functions of our experts, sharpened by recent exercise in the Wharton case, may be usefully employed in considering the cases of hydrophobia, in which the memory of the patient fails to recall that he was ever bitten by any animal. Science, too, might busy itself with finding some cautery for hydrophobia may ever arise de novo in the human body; that is, whether the disease may be generated in the human body without any outside communication. The body of Bradford presented to close scrutiny of the entire surface no bear of former wound except one, that his brother declared came from the bite of an ox years ago. True, the scar may have disappeared. Such cases are abundantly recorded. But Bradford, in his lucid intervals, when questioned on the subject, remembered no such incident as having been bitten by a dog. On that point he was quite positive and consistent throughout, though his mind was never clear enough since his reception into the hospital to have rendered his statements very reliable.

Dr. Whittaker said he was supported by the most eminent and recent authority in declaring that a great many cases of hydrophobia are not the consequence of contact and absorption of a specific virus. Dr. Luke (illustrations of the influence of the mind upon the body in health and disease, with especial reference to the imagination, January, 1871, p. 289, Journal Mental Science, loc. cit.) has shown that, in many cases, hydrophobia arises in persons predisposed to it, from imagination. They are due to mental anxiety, grief or terror, associated with or acting upon a morbid fancy. For, on the one hand, fatal cases have occurred in man without the bite of an animal at all; the mere belief that a bite has been received from a rabid animal has sufficed to induce violent hydrophobia; while, on the other hand, the bites of dogs reputedly mad have been frequently followed by no symptoms whatever. Trousseau mentions having met with a number of cases simulating this disease, but really arising from mental impressions. The most marked instance of it is cited by Scriven (Year Book Syd. Soc. from Journ. Ment. Sc. loc. cit.) where symptoms presented, which although not referable to the bite of a dog, closely resembled hydrophobia, and the individual was only saved from death by prompt laryngotomy with a pen-knife. In fact, the madness in animals, from which these citations from the Journal of Mental Science are made, the author, Lindsay, starts with the following: "Hydrophobia in man is frequently, if not generally, the result of terror, ignorance, prejudice or superstition acting on a morbid imagination and a nervous temperament."

THE CUMANA BAY TREASURE.

Partial Disappointment of the Wrecking Expedition—A New Enterprise to be Entered Upon.

From the Norwich (Conn.) Bulletin, Jan. 25.

George W. Fuller, of this city, manager of the American Submarine Company and of the wrecking expedition sent by it to recover the treasure sunk in the Spanish frigate, the San Pedro de Alcantara, arrived at home from Cumana Bay Tuesday. Mr. Fuller brought with him many interesting curiosities taken from the wreck, some of which are on exhibition at our office in Norwich. Among them are a number of Spanish milled dollars—those taken from the wreck black with corrosion from the action of the salt water and the iron on which they have lain for over half a century, and others taken from the sand beach where they have been washed ashore. There are also the works and other portions of watches made apparently of iron, an oddly-shaped clay pipe, a perfectly preserved tumbler of thick, heavy glass, military buttons and ornaments, grape shot worn to shreds by rust, a case of needles corroded together, but each perfectly distinct and resembling in shape, and the wood with which the ship was planked, as sound and fresh as when first put upon her timbers.

After the arrival of Mr. Fuller at the wreck, the work of clearing the hull was pushed forward with vigor and energy, and was carried on both above and below the water, and in a much shorter time than was expected, the herculean task of removing the débris above the ballast was completed. Then uncertainty became certainty—very little of value was found. The result showed that the treasure room had been down some abaft the after magazine, and by the terrific force of the explosion the contents were blown into the air and scattered broadcast over the bay. A small number of loose coins remained in the wreck, into which they had fallen, but the millions covered the bottom for an area of an acre and a half. From an idea of the power of the explosion may be formed from the fact that the stern-post of the vessel, with twenty-five feet of the keel attached to it, was stripped of all its frames, timbers, transom and planking, and hurled through the air two hundred feet from the wreck, where it was recently discovered with the rudder braces, copper bolts, sheathing, &c., still attached to it, and silver dollars imbedded in the worm-eaten wood, while cannon weighing six tons were found at a distance of three hundred feet, so imbedded in the coral bottom by the force of their fall, that only a few feet of their muzzles were visible.

The wreck having been cleared without result, about the 1st of January the bottom of the sea for a great distance in the vicinity of the wreck was tested. The examination carefully made convinced Mr. Fuller and the other officers that great sums of money are actually buried there, but that in order to obtain it an entire new outfit must be made. This could not be obtained in South America, and the Nellie Grey, which was fitted for the work of breaking up the wreck, (and, as was shown, with the most successful apparatus,) proving unsuitable for economical dredging, it was decided to send her North. Mr. Fuller going on in advance with six men, times his arrival here as has been decided by the Company to proceed at once to fit out small suitable vessels with the apparatus suggested by past experience, and dispatch them as soon as possible to the Bay of Cumana to dredge for coin, and to the Gulf of Cariaco to work the famous pearl beds. The exclusive right to the latter has been granted the Company by the Government for six years, and they were thoroughly tested by Mr. Fuller upon his departure, a number of fine pearls and shells being obtained, together with much practical information of future value. The brig Nellie Gray, on her return to New-London, will be at once fitted for another expedition in search of sunken treasure—one which has not yet been made public, and the details and circumstances of which are known but by very few. Though the ultimate success of the Company's specialities somewhat delayed by the results of the last month's work, it is none the less considered merely a matter of time, and the hopes of a rich reward are as sanguine as ever.

NAVAL PREPARATIONS.

Active Work at the Philadelphia Navy-Yard—Fitting Out of Iron-Clads.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Jan. 26.

The Navy-yard is beginning to assume a busier aspect, and much activity is manifested in the repairing, fitting out and equipping of the several vessels of war now undergoing preparations for active service. The whole force of workmen employed at the present time is about 1,000, and more are being taken on every day. In the various departments the greatest activity can be observed, especially in those of the ordnance and rigging. On the frigate Antietam work is entirely suspended, and has been for months. The iron-clad Nebraska is resting on the stocks. There are six vessels lying at the yard, two of which are monitors, and on all of them repairs are being rapidly pushed forward. The Dictator, which was out of commission a few weeks ago, is receiving two new boilers and otherwise undergoing thorough repairs. The side-wheel steamer Powhatan is receiving her coal preparatory to taking in her stores. She carries nineteen guns, is of 1,730 tons register, and will be ready for service in about ten days. The Wyoming has been thoroughly repaired, and will commence her trial shortly with any vessel of her class in the service. Work on the frigates Constellation and Canada is going on slowly. The monitor Ajax will be ready for sea in a few weeks, her whole hull being repaired and overhauled. The monitor Canonicus has been undergoing her repairs during the last few days, and is now ready for active service, having gone into commission on Monday. Her armament consists of two 15-inch Dahlgren guns. She is a very formidable looking craft, and her destination is supposed to be the West Indies. The following is a list of her officers: Commander, L. R.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The market was dull yesterday, Jan. 26, the only business of any kind transacted at the Exchange being a sale of some assets of no special value, made by E. H. LUDLOW & Co. The legal sale by JAMES M. MILLER of Bothe-hold property located on West Broadway and White streets, did not take place, as the suit involving the title to the same has been for the present settled. For next week the auctions projected are of importance, and considerable valuable real estate will be offered. This will be particularly the case on Thursday, Feb. 1, when JOSEPH MCGUIRE will dispose of some fifty very choice uptown building lots. An important sale of Brooklyn lots will also be held on Tuesday, the 30th, at the Exchange, in this City, by JOHNSON & MILLER. Full particulars of all the sales to occur will, however, be given as usual in our weekly list, published on Monday.

PRISON REFORM.

Large and Enthusiastic Meeting at Steinway Hall.

Address and Speeches by Dr. Wines, Hon. Horatio Seymour and Others.

The Work of the National Prison Association.

Arrangements for the International Penitentiary Congress.

A public meeting of great importance was held last night in Steinway Hall for the purpose of hearing the report of Dr. WINES, Commissioner of the United States, to organize an International Congress to deliberate upon reform in penitentiaries and prisons. The hall, which is a very large one, with two great galleries, was filled with a respectable audience, among whom were many ladies. On the platform there were a few of the statesmen who had been spoken of as likely to attend, but there was a lamentable falling off from what had been expected, and the rows of empty benches were something formidable. Among those present were the District-Attorney, Judge NOAH DAVIS, Commissioners BELL and BRENNAN of Charities and Correction, Mr. HARTLEY, Secretary of the Prison Association, Hon. HORATIO SEYMOUR, Mr. CHAUNCEY DEPEW, Mr. BEACH, the Secretary of the Children's Aid Society, Dr. PRIME, Mr. GEORGE WM. CURTIS, and others. At about 8:10 Dr. PRIME advanced to the front amid loud clapping of hands and made the following address:

DR. PRIME'S INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

GENTLEMEN: The occasion appeals to our interests as citizens, to our judgment as philanthropists, to our hearts as followers of him who said, "I was in prison, and ye came unto me." Will, on to-night, are distinguished statesmen and churchmen—the law and the gospel blending in this divine mission—and their presence gives moral grandeur to the hour. Forty years ago the King of the French sent two of his most eminent men—BEAUMONT, his Attorney-General, and M. DE TOCQUEVILLE—to study our prisons and system. They came to Sing Sing, where I was then a teacher. We had a Sunday-school in the State Prison, which these French Commissioners requested the privilege of attending. DE TOCQUEVILLE stood by my side, holding the Bible in his hands, while a felon convict recited verbatim two entire and beautiful chapters from the Gospel of St. John. Turning to me, the great historian and statesman said: "Has not this instruction much to do with the government of the prison?" That was their first visit, their first lesson, and the memory of it went with them. They recorded the impression in their report to the French Government. In my school—not in the Prison, but in the Academy—was a boy then learning his alphabet, and his name was JOHN. He subsequently became the Chief Magistrate of this City, and is now the justly honored and trusted Governor of the State of New-York. Until this moment we expected the pleasure of his company, but, detained as he is by official business, I have great pleasure in saying we have among us to-night a statesman, who by common consent stands in the front rank of the public men of this country as a philanthropist and a social philosopher. [Applause.] I move, Gentlemen, that Hon. HORATIO SEYMOUR be requested to preside over this meeting. The nomination was received with great applause.

At its conclusion a list of Vice-Presidents and Honorary Secretaries were appointed by acclamation, and Dr. PRIME announced that the first speaker would be Hon. HORATIO SEYMOUR, whose name was received with great applause. He spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF MR. SEYMOUR.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: Crimes of violence, fraud and corruption at this time startle the American public. They excite general indignation and alarm, and the offenders are pointed at as men to be scorned and detested. But the same hot touch nor cure the underlying causes of these evils. These men had not a fresh genius in crime that they could, of themselves, work out all their baleful deeds if there had not been a state of morals and a depraved public opinion which gave a hot-bed growth to their powers to work mischief. They did not make corruption, corruption made them. They grew and moved unknown and unnoticed until they were made pestilential by favoring circumstances, just as the lurking diseases are made wide-sweeping plagues when a foul atmosphere develops their deadly poisons. We cannot deal with this subject of the suppression of crime in a large and truthful way, without arraigning the public. In no other civilized country, and let me add, for the honor of our country, at no other period of its history, would such men be tolerated for a single day. Just now there is enough of indignation against criminals, too much, indeed. If it ends in this, the mass of our people that they forget to look for the causes of these evils, if they neglect the duty of finding out how much of the guilt can be traced back to themselves. Unless we confront the disorders of the times in a bold and earnest way, we shall merely cut down one class of wrong-doers so that they may be followed by another, which will spring up in its place. Crimes do not show so clearly the character of the criminals as they do the social aspect of the communities in which they are committed. All who study the problems of government are struck with the fact that the American people are in many ways most neglectful of political duties. We have more than enough of political strife, passion, and prejudice, but the feeling that wealth, and power, and influence have duties as well as rights is very weak. In this respect our men of wealth fall far behind the privileged classes of Europe. A British peer of the realm will take part in questions of government, local or general, where one of our City merchants feels that his sphere may be distinguished by ability and position if he does not give the world to understand that he looks upon all such things as unworthy diversion from the great duty of taking care of himself and his personal affairs. In battling with crime the first necessity is a wise criminal code, well administered. I know we have neither of them in the State of New-York, and I do not think they have them in other States of this Union. I need not tell you how hopeless you are of the conviction of great criminals, nor how much you are bewildered by the subtle distinctions and complicated procedure of criminal actions. There are features of our criminal code which disgrace us. Yet, in regard to this subject, which concerns all men's lives and property, there is a deadness in the public mind which depresses all who try to get reform. It is not by active opposition that reform can be put down. The disheartening trouble is that neither the public nor do the legislators care enough about the matter to help or to hinder. In this city it is sometimes quite as safe for a poor man to commit a crime as to be an innocent witness of one, as he is liable to be detained and locked up, so that he may testify on a trial where the wrong-doer may escape the penalties of the law. The Governor of this State has appealed to the Legislature to adopt measures to do away with this scrucity, but he meets with the indifference which his predecessors have felt when they have tried to bring about reforms in our criminal code.

As to the manner our criminal code is executed you can judge how far it tends to punish or to protect criminals. I can with truth say that the defects of our criminal laws, and of their execution, are chargeable to the indifference of our people, and of their representatives in legislative bodies. But it is upon the subject of the reform of criminals that the public fails most in doing its duty. We are apt to draw a broad black line around all convicts, and so think they are all of one moral class; there are glittering diamonds in the rubbish washed down by the unhealthy rivers of Africa, so there are shining virtues to be found among the human wrecks in our prisons. Many have been overcome by sudden temptations. Some are the victims of insidious habits which have enslaved them before they were aware of danger. It is the duty of a State to cultivate every good quality of those unhappy men. They are sent to prison for particular acts, not for their general character. Hope is a great reformer. Despair is deadly and dangerous. We have by great efforts gained some communications for those prisoners who behave well, but there is a great field of reform. Now, men come out of our prisons poor and friendless; feeling that their long years of toil have brought to them or their families no gain, but that they must go out into the world with their bodies and their enhanced characters. How different would be their conditions if by wise legislation they were allowed to keep for themselves or their families the whole or a share of their earnings. That hopeless toil which now only weakens their bodies and wears out their souls would then be made quite hope. How would they follow their trades in their imagination as it went to give comfort to their families; how would their best affections glow and kindle as in their speechless solitude they were thus linked to the object of their affection! How would they gain the courage which would make them ready to battle with the trials of life when the day of their discharge should come! Wise legislation would make our prisons gate-ways to reformation. Now there is stamped upon their portals the aspect which tell all who enter them that they must leave hope behind. If we turn from the prisons where the criminals are confined to those places where they are carefully tended, it is but the change of the methods of view where more than half the victims are those who have made the crime which they suffer. I look upon the lava against these gaunt and emaciated sufferers, their titles seem to read, "Ales, to punish the wives and children of worthless men." However perplexing the questions may be which meet us in our efforts to improve, we must grapple them with courage and energy. We can work out great results. We can make life and property safe and secure. We can lift up fallen men. We can stock the side of vice and crime. In doing this we shall not only serve and save others, but do much for ourselves. All my experiences has led me to feel kindly toward my fellow-man. The longer I live the better I think of men's hearts and the better of their head. I grow more and more disposed to charge the evils when do to their infirmities, and the more deeply I am impressed with the great truth of that religion which teaches us the need of a Spirit to guide, a Savior to atone, and a merciful God to forgive manifold sins and transgressions.

When the Governor took his seat there was much applause, after which it was announced that Dr. WINES would read some of the letters of excuse he had received from distinguished gentlemen in this and other States. In his introductory address with which Dr. WINES prefaced his reading, he said that he had received more than twenty from men who were not only interested in prison reform, but also in furthering the project of an International Penitentiary Congress, which he was personally engaged in organizing. Of these he would read but two, the first from the distinguished gentleman who occupied the Executive chair of the State, the Hon. JOHN T. HOFFMAN. This was as follows:

GOV. HOFFMAN'S LETTER.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, ALBANY, Jan. 24, 1872.

SIR: I find that it will be out of my power to attend the meeting to be held at Steinway Hall, in New-York City, on the 26th inst. to consider the subject of prison reform. I am in strong sympathy with the purposes of the members of the meeting, and believe with them that the diminution of crime, the improvement of prison discipline and the reformation of persons who have been guilty of crime are objects which need the efforts of all good men. Conferences among the friends of prison reform in the several States of our Union, and as you now propose a consultation among those in this country and in Europe who take special interest in the project, will tend to throw much light on the questions of the direction in which efforts for improvements are likely to be most successful, and of what are the best means for accomplishing the improvement. The statistics and general information thus to be gathered cannot fail to be of great service in future efforts for reform. One of the subjects to which the attention of the meeting is to be called is the condition of convicts when discharged from prison. Here is an opportunity for doing great good, not only to the convicts themselves, but to the community at large. The condition of the convict at the expiration of his term of imprisonment is one of peculiar hardship. The State has wisely provided that by good conduct while in prison the criminal may earn a deduction from his term of imprisonment. The good conduct results not after he leaves the prison. He generally shares the fate of all discharged convicts and encounters difficulties in obtaining honest employment so great as to be almost insurmountable, and is, as a more, impelled into the repetition of crime. If benevolent men among us would direct their thoughts earnestly to the devising and carrying out some plan whereby this unfortunate class might be helped and encouraged instead, and not as now it worked when seeking to support themselves by honest work, they could find an opportunity to render great service. My experience in my present office and my conference with convicts satisfy me that more immediate practical benefit would result to the convict from measures calculated to lessen the difficulties which he encounters when freshly discharged from prison than any other improvement that can be suggested in our present mode of treating criminals.

Very respectfully, JOHN T. HOFFMAN.

Rev. E. C. WINES, D. D., LL. D., New-York.

After this he read a short letter from President GRANT regretting his inability to be present, and expressing his warmest sympathy with the objects of the meeting.

Dr. WINES mentioned that he had received letters from Vice-President Schuyler Colfax, Hon. Mr. Sumner, Speaker Jas. G. Blaine, Archbishop McCloskey, of New-York, Hon. Wm. D. Kelley, Hon. E. C. Kerr, of Indiana, and others of equal standing. After the letters Dr. WINES read the following report:

DR. WINES' ADDRESS.

MR. PRESIDENT, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: The Congress of Cincinnati, held in the Autumn of 1870, voted that the time had come when, in its judgment, an International Penitentiary Congress might be contained with promise of the best results. One of the first acts of the National Prison Association was to reaffirm the action of the Cincinnati meeting, and pass a resolution to push that idea with all practicable vigor. The person now addressing you was charged by the Association, as he had previously been by the Congress, with this grave duty. My first effort in fulfilment of the duty thus laid upon me, was to secure the support of the National Government. Through the powerful aid of my friend here, Mr. Speaker BLAINE, a joint resolution was passed by Congress favoring the proposition, and authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to represent the Government in the Convention. The President was pleased to name the speaker as such Commissioner, and, it being understood that my appointment involved the further duty of organizing the elements and arranging the preliminaries of the Congress, the Secretary of State obligingly furnished me with a general letter addressed to all the Diplomatic and Consular representatives of the United States in Europe, requesting them to render such aid as they properly might in the prosecution of my mission.

Before going abroad, I sought still further to strengthen myself by securing the adherence of the Foreign Ministers resident at Washington. The request was promptly given. The Ministers entered warmly into the project. Of their own motion they addressed dispatches to their Governments, commending the proposition to a favorable consideration. The European Ministers furnished, in addition, letters of personal introduction to their respective Cabinets. Personal communications were opened with the Governments of England, France, Belgium, Holland, North Germany, Austria, Italy, and Switzerland, and with the remaining Governments of Europe, through the American Ministers accredited to them. Three things were asked of each, viz.:

1. That it would send Commissioners to the Congress.

2. That it would name a National Committee for its own country.

3. That it would furnish, in reply to a series of questions, certain information concerning its prisons and prison administration.

These requests were readily granted. Everywhere the idea of the Congress was accepted by the Governments, and assurances were given, not of sympathy only, but of active co-operation.

In illustration of the spirit in which the proposition for the Congress was received, I cite the official action of the Italian Government. It consists of two parts: First, a report addressed by the Prime Minister, Mr. LANZA, to VICTOR EMMANUEL, in which he proposes to his Majesty the creation, by royal decree, of a National Committee or Commission for Italy; and secondly, the decree itself, issued in pursuance of Mr. LANZA'S recommendation.

The royal decree named a Committee of twenty eminent citizens to act for Italy in behalf of the Congress; also to study the most important questions offered by modern penitentiary science, and to propose their solution. The Committee thus constituted includes several high functionaries of the State, the Mayor of Florence and President of the Court of Cassation, four Professors of penal law, the Director-General, and two Inspectors-General of Prisons, &c., &c.

The Government of the North German Union was no less cordial, no less earnest, in its action in behalf of the Congress. It is but a few days ago that I received from Count EULENBURG, Minister of the Interior for that Government, a letter written, as he states, under instructions from Prince BISMARCK, from which I make a short extract. The Minister says: "Sir: In reply to your letters of the 6th October and 8th November, I have the honor to inform you that, according to your wish, I informed Prince BISMARCK of your mission regarding the International Congress on the question of prisons, in order that the interest of the other Governments of the Empire may be directed to the approaching Congress. Prince BISMARCK at once responded to this wish, and I am to answer, from him, that participation in this work, with whom preparation you have been charged, shall belong not only to Prussia, but to Germany. As to your questions relating to the condition of German prisons, I have placed them in the hands of Herr STEINMANN, Counselor in my Ministry, and specially occupied on the prison question. He has undertaken this work and will send the answers to your address next week. I have also requested Herr STEINMANN to place himself in communication with persons in the different States of the Empire interested in this subject, for the forming of Committees, with whom he may confer."

It is evident from these recitals that the Italian and Prussian Governments are hearty in this work; and if there were time for a similar detail of their action, it would be seen that other European Governments are no less so.

The Academy of Moral and Political Sciences of the Institute of France, the most illustrious body of sages in the world, is fully committed to the Congress. By invitation of M. DE REMUSAT, Minister of Foreign Affairs, I had the honor, on the 2d of September last, to read a discourse on the subject before that Academy, and the President, in replying, pledged its members to the use of their best efforts in promoting the success of the Congress.

Another signal proof of the profound interest felt by Europe in the proposed conference was the meeting held in London on the 8d of November, which was called to hear from the American Commissioner a statement of the objects and results of his mission, and to give voice to the sentiment of England on the question of the Congress. There were present and participating in that meeting, no less than four Ministers of the Queen's Cabinet, several leading members of Parliament, and one of the most eminent prelates of the Roman Catholic Church, Archbishop MANNING. But one sentiment animated the assemblage, that of warm approval of the Congress, and of high expectations from it. This was the burden of all the speeches. A Royal Commission for England, yesterday, the meeting, consisting of more than 100 persons, among whom are the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Bishop of London, Archbishop Manning, Dean Stanley, the Lord Chancellors of [illegible] and Mary Carpenter, and Mr. [illegible] Mr. Matthew Davenport Hill, and many other [illegible] Ireland, Scotland and Canada, [illegible] from the Ministers of the [illegible] Republics of America, as well as of the Empire of Brazil, that their Governments are preparing with no less zeal than the Governments of Europe, to take part in what Mr. LAYARD, in his letter, designated as "this great scientific-social movement." So that there is good reason to believe that there will be few, if any, among the civilized nations of the world that will not be present, by their representatives in the Convention.

It was my intention to offer a short report of some of the most remarkable prisons visited. But I must not occupy this time due to others. A single word more and I have done. The American Prison Association feels that it has undertaken a great and good work, one which promises results of the highest value to the whole country. But it is a work which cannot be done—should not and good work can—without money. The generosity of Americans has been thoroughly tested. There are no people in the world who give so freely, when the occasion is worthy. Not doubting, but, on the contrary, earnestly believing, that the present is a worthy occasion, we ask their aid—we ask your aid—without hesitation and without misgiving.

The address was long, but it was listened to with great interest, and was loudly applauded at its termination. Dr. WINES bowed in acknowledgment, and expressed his regret at being obliged to state that out of the eight or ten eminent speakers who were pledged to address the meeting, there appeared to be none present. He announced that the resolutions would be read by the Hon. Mr. WAYLAND, Lieutenant-Governor of Connecticut, and the Chairman, Gov. SEYMOUR, introduced the gentleman from Connecticut, who made a short, stirring address, and then read the following resolutions, which he explained had been prepared by Mr. F. B. SANBORN, President of the Board of Charities, of Massachusetts.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That the discipline and proper treatment of criminals, the repression of crime, the administration of penal justice, and the reformation of individuals and classes or persons now devoted to vicious lives, or growing up to prey upon society, are objects of the first importance in every well-ordered State, and still more in every Christian community; that these objects are too little considered among us, and that there is urgent necessity for more thought, more time, more practical attention, and more earnest, devoted, conscientious effort to be given in this country than has been vouchsafed hitherto, above all, preventive discipline for the tempted and dangerous classes.

Resolved, That the National Prison Association of the United States, being organized on a comprehensive plan for the consideration and public presentation of these momentous subjects, deserves the cordial support of the people of this country, and is hereby commended to the citizens of the individual States, and of the whole country, as worthy of their attention, their co-operation and their contributions, without which its beneficent mission cannot be fulfilled.

Resolved, That the task of compiling the organization and extending the activity of the National Prison Association in the several States and Territories ought to be taken up and carried forward in all parts of the country, and by the formation of local associations, of Committees of Correspondence with the National Association; and that this meeting would invite the attention of State Governments and public-spirited citizens throughout the land to the subject, with a view to the more perfect establishment of intercommunication.

Resolved, That the efforts of the National Prison Association, already crowned with success, in the convocation at London, on the 3d of July, 1872, of an International Congress to take counsel together, and to form and promulgate conclusions in regard to penal and reformatory discipline, have been timely and judicious, and, in unison with the hearty approval of this meeting, that such a congress, representing, as we have reason to believe it will, all nations of the civilized world, will be able to perform a service of great importance to the cause of humanity, if it is convoked, and that it is our hope that every State in this Union will take part in its deliberations by official delegates, as 20 out of 21 parts of our country are, and by the discussions and by personal conference with philanthropists and men of practical administrative experience of other nationalities.

Resolved, That the election by the President of the United States, of Hon. E. C. Wines, D. D., LL. D., as Commissioner to represent the country at the International Congress, has given to the Government and the people an official representative in all respects worthy of the highly responsible trust conferred on him, and that we congratulate Dr. WINES on the opportunity thus afforded him to present, in the name of the whole people, those practical and yet advanced views of prison discipline, for which he has been for years the distinguished advocate.

Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting, of all our countrymen, and of the friends of prison reform throughout the world, are due to Dr. WINES for the energy, zeal, and wise activity with which he has prosecuted the work of reformation and improvement in American prisons, and especially for the conspicuous share he has had in organizing and conducting toward success the great movement in favor of a World's Congress for the study of penal discipline and the repression of crime; that the deliberations of such a Congress, in the land of its birth, of prison reform, inaugurated in 1773 by the benevolence of JOHN HOWARD; and that we recognize in Dr. WINES one of those worthy successors of HOWARD who have been permitted by Divine Providence to carry forward the noble work which the illustrious English philanthropist began.

Resolved, That the work of Prison reform, commenced a century ago and therefore early, difficult of a formidable character, though not yet accomplished, has made gratifying progress; that public punishment, both as a science and an art, is now far in advance of what it was then; that it is now felt that the close of one century and the beginning of another in this department of social science should be signalized by the reunion of all nations for conference on the subject, that the wisest minds of society, then present in a suitable time for reviewing the past, forecasting the future, and gathering strength, by mutual counsels and encouragements, for the vast work before them; and that it is our hopeful conviction that an influence will go forth from the Congress of London which, properly guided and stimulated in the coming years, will insure progress, at once accelerated and direct, in the right direction.

Resolved, That this meeting responds, in hearty and emphatic tones, to the utterances of the great meeting of the 3d of November in London, in which so many of the ablest and wisest citizens participated, and to the cordial action of European and South American Governments, which have pledged their co-operation in what Mr. LAYARD, Prime Minister of Italy, kindly and happily has described as "this great scientific-social movement."

Resolved, That a National Committee be appointed for the United States, to be charged with whatever relates to preparation for the Congress of this country, and that the following persons be designated, subject to their own approval, as such Committee, to wit:

New-York—His Excellency John T. Hoffman, Hon. Horatio Seymour, Theodore W. Dwight, LL. D., Francis Lieber, LL. D., Elisha Harris, M. D., Hon. W. F. Allen, J. Hilton Scribner, Rev. Chas. L. Brace, D. D., Rev. E. C. Wines, D. D., LL. D., Godlove S. Rice, Wm. Aylman, D. D., Henry Arkman, D. D., John Stanton Gould, Gaylord S. Hubbell, Rev. Dr. Osgood, E. C. Wines, LL. D.

Massachusetts—His Excellency W. B. Washburne, F. B. Sanborn, Samuel Elliott, LL. D., L. G. Howe, M. D., Geo. E. Emerson, LL. D., Hon. Wm. Claflin, Edward Earle, J. W. Candler, Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D. D.

Arkansas—His Excellency P. A. Hadley.

California—His Excellency Newton Booth, Hon. E. Haight, Hon. Thos. H. Selby, Hon. Wm. Alend, Rev. James Woodworth.

Connecticut—His Excellency Marshall Jewell, Hon. Jas. E. English, Hon. Francis Wayland, Prof. D. C. Gilman, Timothy M. Allyn, Esq., E. W. Hatch, M. C., Rev. Thos. H. Pasenden.

Delaware—His Excellency James Pender.

Alabama—His Excellency Robert B. Lindsay, Rev. Samuel Taylor, Sandy W. Jones, James Eupier.

Gov. SEYMOUR put the resolutions to the vote, and they were accepted by enthusiastic acclamation.

After the adoption of the resolutions, Prof. LEIBER was introduced to the audience. In the course of his address he said:

Punishment is one of those subjects to which civilized nations have bestowed their attention only of late. No family community or State able to exist without it, yes how brief a time it is since attention has been paid to the subject. In former times no attention was paid to the criminal after he was pronounced guilty—it was "hang him, or get him out of the way some how." Now we have begun to think of his reformation, under sentence, and to ask what to do with him. One of the evidences of civilization is the answer to the questions, what is done with an indicted man? How do they try him, and what do they do with him when found guilty. These are important and interesting questions to the political economist and the philanthropist. The subject under consideration should engage the same attention which is given to other questions of social science. An international feeling is uniting the cis-caucasian races. International congresses of various kinds have taken place, and now one of the most interesting character is to be held.

Hon. MR. HAGEMAN, of New-Jersey, was introduced. He suggested, in view of the disappointments of the evening, that it was not always necessary to call on the dignitaries of the land to make an address. He thought that Mr. PILSBURY could have made a more effective speech from his own personal experience than any of them. He proceeded to speak of the importance of continuing certainty of punishment with humanity to the criminal.

Capt. PILSBURY was then introduced by the Chairman and made a brief speech.

Neither Dr. BELLOWS nor Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER attended, and the audience retired after having borne their many disappointments with the utmost good humor.

Minor Crimes and Casualties.

JOHN MCGRATH and NELSE NELSON, keepers of a sailors' boarding-house at Nos. 22 Cherry-street and 21 James-street, were committed for trial by Justice DOWLING, yesterday, upon complaints made by Capt. DUNCAN that they kept a disorderly house without service.

WM. LONG was committed for trial, yesterday, at the Tombs Police Court, for stealing shirts worth $60 from JULIUS SHIVE & CO., No. 97 Courtlandt-street.

HENRY BENCKE, who says he lives at No. 108 Delancey-street, was arraigned yesterday before Justice Dowling, at the Tombs Police Court, on a charge of perjury. It appears that BENCKE, offering to become bail in the suit of DORAN BURNELL vs. GEORGE RAPHAEL, swore that he was worth $6,000, and owned the house and lot No. 108 Delancey-street. Sheriff BRENNAN caused the records to be searched, and no property being found in the name of BENCKE, a complaint was made against him, and he was committed for trial.

PETER HOGGLER and ANTONIE ULRICH, the two illicit distillers, who were arrested a short time since in Sullivan County, were brought before Commissioner SHIELDS, yesterday, and, waiving examination, were held in $500 bail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

RAID ON THIEVES.

Another Descent by Capt. Mount—A Notorious Thieves' Den Captured.

Capt. JOHN J. MOUNT, of the Fourteenth Precinct, last night made further progress in the work of purifying that Precinct by a well-planned descent upon the thieves' den in the basement saloon, corner of Hester-street and the Bowery. With ten men, accompanied by Sergts. SANDERS and CATT, he reached the place by a circuitous route, and pounced in upon the thieves as suddenly that they were unable to escape or to make any resistance. Having secured the men, ten in number, Capt. MOUNT gave his attention to search the place, and behind the bar found almost a cartload of burglars' tools, among which was a specimen of almost every implement ever used by these marauders. The prisoners were taken to the Fourteenth Precinct Station-house, where they were all locked up to await arraignment this morning at the Tombs. They gave their names, occupations, ages and residences as follows:

James Morgan, twenty-eight, plumber, No. 22 Hamilton-street; Thos. Eugene, twenty-one, welch-master, No. 51 King-street; Pat. Connolly, twenty-seven, liquor-dealer, No. 61 King-street; Thos. Jones, twenty-four, blacksmith, No. 24 Monroe-street; Frank Wilson, twenty-four, plumber, No. 75 East Tenth-street; John Lynch, forty, blacksmith, No. 114 Hester-street; Wm. Connolly, twenty-three, mechanic, No. 63 Forsyth-street; Thos. Kinsley, twenty-one, bartender, No. 145 Cherry-street; Wm. Thompson, twenty-six, saloon-keeper, No. 26 Ludlow-street.

Notwithstanding these innocent names and occupations, they are all thieves, well known to the Police under various aliases.

PETER KNAPP, the keeper of the den, was also arrested. He has, however, been the proprietor but a short time, and the place had become one of the most infamous in the City while it was kept by PATSEY CONROY. It was a resort for the most desperate criminals of New-York, who, over the vile liquor sold in the place, planned there some of the most atrocious and daring crimes of violence perpetrated during the last few years. When the descent was made, the officers who incurred the most danger were Detectives BRAN and DUNLOP, of the Fourteenth Precinct, who got to the rear door and guarded it, while Capt. MOUNT rushed in with his posse by the front doors.

Mr. Greeley on Protection.

Mr. HORACE GREELEY lectured before the Tribune Club last evening on the subject of Political Economy. He asserted, as a foundation, that the question of having or not having a tariff, was not before the people of this country. Forty-two Congresses had acted, or declined to act, on the question of raising revenue by tariff. It had never been proposed to the people to impose a tariff on goods imported into the country. Every civilized nation exacted import duties. The first Congress imposed taxes for three objects: First, to support the Government; second, to pay the national debt, and, third, to protect home manufactures. Freeing some articles from duty must necessarily impose higher duties on others. He asserted that not a single ton of coal, salt or pig-iron had been smuggled into the country since the tariff was first imposed. There must be not only be a tariff, but a discriminating tariff, which must be in its nature not inimical to protection. The products of Massachusetts were twice as much every year as those of Virginia, they being the result of its productive industries. The cheapness of an article was not determined by what it cost. The lecturer gave a history of the manufacture of beet sugar in France, urged more persons to embark in the manufacture of iron in this country, and made many applications to show that protection was the only true policy of the nation.

Changes in the Board of Police.

At a meeting of the Board of Police, held at a late hour yesterday, Patrolman LOUIS G. PAYNE, Twenty-first Precinct, was dismissed from the Department, for intoxication; Sergts. WILLIAM H. ALDIS and JOHN M. ROBBINS, Fifth, were retired on pension; Sergt. WATSON VREDENBURGH was transferred from the Twenty-first Precinct to the Fifth; Sergt. PHILIP M. GRIFFITH from the Fourteenth to the Twenty-first, and Sergt. THOMAS REED from the Twenty-second to the Fourteenth; Roundsman HENRY SHUTEBURY was made Acting-Sergeant and assigned to the Fifth Precinct.

Reform Democratic Primaries.

In response to the call of the Reform Democratic General Committee, primary elections were held last evening in the several Assembly Districts, between the hours of 6 and 11 o'clock, for delegates to the General Committee for 1872. Each Assembly District was entitled to three delegates for each election district contained therein. A Supervisor of Enrollment acted as Supervisor of Election in each Assembly District, the duty being to see that none but legally elected voters deposited ballots. The elections passed off quietly in all the districts.

Daring Burglary in Jersey City.

Two burglars entered the house of Mr. CHRISTIE, at No. 412 Grove-street, Jersey City, on Thursday night, and awoke that gentleman and his wife, presenting revolvers to their heads and demanding to know where the valuables were kept. They were informed, and secured about $1,[illegible] worth of silver-ware and left, first threatening Mr. and Mrs. CHRISTIE that if any warning was given they would be shot. They were so badly frightened that the matter was not reported to the Police until 7 o'clock yesterday morning, too late for any arrests to be made.

The Standing Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, charged with the consideration of domestic manufactures, American machinery and inventions, met yesterday and elected Mr. SALEM H. WALES Chairman, in place of Mr. HENRY B. WORTHINGTON, resigned.

The Executive Committee of the Ninth District Great Club met last night to organize for the present year. Mr. EDWARD TAYLOR was elected Chairman, and Mr. DANIEL L. OKIE Secretary. The Chairman reappointed the committees of last year.

A meeting of the subscribers and supporters of the new German theatre movement was held last evening at Leiderkranz Hall. The Commissioner of Subscriptions reported that 41,000 additional had been subscribed, making the sum total new paid up $180,000.

FRANK B. HUGHES, one of the proprietors of the Canterbury, who escaped arrest on the night of the descent upon that infamous resort, was captured yesterday by Capt. MOUNT, and being arraigned before Justice DOWLING was committed for trial in default of bail.

At the Polytechnic Institute, last evening, Prof. GEORGE K. OSBORNE exhibited the model of a water-gauge, to be constructed so to measure the height of water in boilers, while the appendages are so arranged that the gauge can be placed at any elevation in relation to the boiler.

An alarm was sent from the First Precinct Police, yesterday, that a man dressed in dark clothes, full beard, about five feet six inches in height and carrying a small package of cigars was circulating counterfeit $10 on the Farmers' and Manufacturers' National Bank of Poughkeepsie.

The Board of Managers of the New-York Produce Exchange have issued an address to the members, advising that a building be purchased for the purposes of the Exchange, and that the members be assessed $200 each, a proposition to which 600 members have already given their consent.

On Monday evening next, the 29th inst., the anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association will occur at their building, corner Twenty-third-street and Fourth-avenue. Rev. Dr. HENRY E. SCUDDER, of Brooklyn, Rev. Geo. H. HEPWORTH, and Rev. STEPHEN H. TYNG, Jr., will be among the speakers.

The Governing Committee of the Stock Exchange yesterday confirmed the overwhelming vote of the members in favor of prohibiting the selling of stocks after 3 o'clock P. M. daily except Saturdays, and on Saturdays after 2 P. M. This makes the proposition a law. Heavy penalties are prescribed for infringing it.

The Subcommittee on Quarantine met at the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday, and adopted a report submitted by Mr. HUMPHREYS, embodying the draft of an act for the correction of quarantine abuses, to be submitted to the Legislature. The report will be presented to the Chamber of Commerce next Thursday.

Yesterday afternoon Gens. HALPINE and GLEASON and O'DONOVAN ROSSA called at the Controller's office to seek an interview with Mr. GREEN, to ask what was his reason for discharging so many of their countrymen from the Courts and other Departments under his control. After waiting two hours, Mr. GREEN being too busy to see them, the delegation withdrew.

That portion of the Nineteenth Ward from Forty-seventh to Forty-ninth streets, between First and Second avenues, is infested with a gang of young thieves and roughs, and people in business in that locality cannot use the front of their stores to expose their wares for sale without having them stolen almost before their eyes. The residents complain that the Police force is totally inadequate for that district.

We call attention to the notice in our advertising columns of Dr. CHANDLER'S lecture this evening, on "Our Gas-lights." Our numerous correspondents, who have recently made our paper the vehicle for their complaints of the quantity and quality of the gas furnished by the companies in this City, have now an opportunity of seeing the gas analysed, and its illuminating power tested in their presence.

Controller GREEN has this week paid to the Department of Parks $60,000, for wages of laborers employed by that Department. The Controller is only waiting the action of the Legislature to enable him to proceed with the business of the Finance Department to meet claims against the City. He has also advanced $60,000 to pay the large pipe men. The latter received a portion of their wages yesterday.

During a childish quarrel last evening, RICHARD BRADY, aged twenty years, of No. [illegible] West Forty-seventh-street, fired a pistol shot at another boy whose name is unknown, but missing him, the bullet struck LILLIE LAVAL, aged twelve years, of No. 419 West Forty-ninth-street, causing a severe scalp wound. JOE fled immediately and up to a late hour had not been found by the Police. The little girl was taken to her home.

Commissioner BETTS rendered a decision in the case of JAMES RILEY, the alleged Post-office embezzler, yesterday. He said that the testimony of the witness KENNEDY, that he saw RILEY open the letter, was only controverted by the statement of the defendant; nothing had been brought before him showing that KENNEDY was an untruthful man, and under those circumstances he thought the case must be one for the Grand Jury to pass upon. He should, therefore, hold the defendant in $5,000 bail to answer.

Twenty-nine policemen were arraigned yesterday before Commissioner MANIERRE. Patrolmen JOHN MINNICK and PATRICK BYRNE, Twenty-ninth Precinct, were accused, upon the Sixth Ward police-court records, of "Drunkenness," of saying to Miss MARY STEERING, when she complained to them of being robbed of a pocket-book containing $65, that it served her right for carrying a pocket-book in plain sight. Capt. CLINCHY testified that he had called on Miss STEERING and she had told him the officers did not use this language to her. The case was referred to the Board. The other cases were of no public interest.

ITALIAN NOTES.

King and Pope—A Hack-Drivers' Strike—The Absence of Liszt—An American Citizen and Its Value—Dogs of Royalty—A Religious Fête.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ROME, Saturday, Jan. 6, 1872.

With all the past rebuffs, the King does not despair of yet standing well with the Pope, and so on New-Year's Day he sent to the Pontiff in a formal manner the felicitations of the season. Of course the King received no response. The view taken at the Vatican is that such acts of intended courtesy are only compliments of mockery, and add insult to injury. But the King some time ago declared, se io sono il primo re d'Italia sarò anche il primo gentiluomo—if I am the first King of Italy, I will be also the first gentleman—so he is bound to be true to the pledge. Whatever might be the Pope's personal feelings or wishes, as the head of the Clerical Party he cannot with any grace come half way to meet the adversary who brings in his mouth or hand offers of reconciliation. So far as the revolution in Italy is concerned—the radical movement by which the people are escaping from an undue ecclesiastical control—it may be well if the reconciliation is for some time yet put off. The price of friendship now would be the voting of laws by which the Church would in part secure its power. There are those high in place who would readily help in such a work; the leading object accomplished—the unity of Italy with Rome the central political seat—this assented to and confirmed by the Clerical Party. In a political sense it would be a great point gained, and the Government would be strengthened; but in the point of view of ecclesiastical reform it would be a backward step. It would be like the ending of the American War of the Rebellion in the second year—the unity of the country preserved with slavery retained. In Italy the abolition of the clerical and civil powers may safely continue some time yet.

A HACK-DRIVERS' STRIKE.

The sensation of the week has been caused by the strike, or demonstration of resistance to a municipal ordinance of the drivers of hackney carriages in Rome. There are fifteen hundred or more of these vehicles with license from the city authorities, and for nearly a week, to the great inconvenience of the public, not one of them was seen in the streets. For some time past the small tax of three francs a month has been imposed upon these conveyances, which has caused considerable complaint, as the tariff which has been in force for some time is low, being only sixteen sous for a course, with a carriage with a single horse, any distance within the walls of Rome—a circuit as wide as that of the area of the City of New-York. But the step taken by the municipality which has excited the present opposition, was the order given for each carriage to carry lamps with the number of the carriage painted on the crystals. In addition to this, the drivers instead of the free-and-easy calabrese, half-brigand felt covering for the head, must mount the stove-pipe hat of city civilization. In Florence, when the law was passed, it was conformed to with little opposition. In that dandified city, the decorum of an exterior decency is generally pretty promptly recognized. This strike of the coachmen does not seem to be in itself a matter of much consequence; but the Romans are disposed to make of it a serious affair. So resolute has been the determination to make the half-revolutionary pretext succeed, that the few omnibuses and other public vehicles left in circulation, have been obliged to have upon the box policemen to protect the drivers against assault. Certain old partisans have been ready to promote, in concealment, a movement which seems to promise the growth of a feeling of popular insubordination. With increased taxes, the Romans find that freedom costs something; but the burden will be pretty equally borne, for already the price of almost all articles is considerably increased. If they will only wake up from their lethargy and try to do something for themselves, instead of trusting to travelers and new-comers as formerly, the Romans will find that they can mend their fortunes more rapidly, and in a more manly way. These Romans are sensitive people, and one finds it necessary to be careful and not disturb too rudely their belief that their habits and customs are as nearly perfect as those of the rest of the world.

THE ABSENCE OF LISZT.

Among the things we miss in Rome are the tall figure and face of seraphic calm of the Abbé Liszt. He has gone to Pesth to enjoy the pension settled upon him several years ago by the Emperor of Austria. It is less than ten years since the eminent pianist came to Rome and received the ordination of priest, with the hope of being made the director of the music of the Papal Chapel. It was the ambition of his life, and he was disappointed. The Pope did not like German music, nor that of Liszt, and to this was added the prejudice of the Italians; and finally after years of waiting the musician abandoned the quest. Without being a monk, he lived in a convent, with an entrance of his own, by which his friends could come and see him, and sometimes he regaled them with the music struck out by the touch of his fingers of marvelous skill. Now and then, but rarely, would he play in the house of some more distinguished lover of his art, or patrician circle, to which he was invited. His American piano he has left behind him in Rome. Several years ago, or just after the close of the Paris Exposition, one day Liszt received a note informing him that the piano of American manufacture which had received the highest prize at that great show, and which he himself had played upon during his visit, was on its way to Rome as a present from the manufacturer. A day or two after half a dozen stout cassettini were seen unloading an enormous box at the convent door. There was no opportunity to say no to the generous imposition of his American friends, and so with thanks was accepted the valuable gift so resolutely thrust upon him. The artist has used the instrument ever since, but has left it behind him on going away from Rome. It is believed by his most intimate friends that Liszt will come back, as he loves Rome so much and has once before tried a year or more of exile. The artist-priest is growing old, but his aspect is that of the serene rest of a mind in which the passions have been calmed by meditations and the discipline of the devotion of cloister life. Liszt has not always been a saint; at least not according to the exactions of society as constituted in our time. He did not succeed with the Pope in his efforts to get married, after his irregularities were committed, and so he became a priest. Of his three natural children, his son died at sixteen; his daughter, who became the wife of Ollivier, at one time French Minister, died later; and the living child, first the wife of Hans de Bulow, the pianist, and now the wife of Wagner, the great composer. So much for Liszt, the artist, priest, and musician, who has fascinated us all with his sweet skill.

COST OF ROYALTY.

To show what royal government costs, it may be mentioned that this week a contract has been signed by which the pretty sum of four and a half millions of francs goes for the purchase of a new hunting-box for the King. The Castle of Fortigliano is about nine miles from Rome, in the direction of Ostia, and has lately been the property of the parvenu Grazioli family, by which it is now transferred to the Government. The house, which, according to Minghetti, is a structure partly of the fourteenth and partly of the fifteenth centuries, stands in the middle of a vast wood of twenty or thirty miles in circuit, which is to be the future royal hunting-ground. The domain stretches to the shores of the Mediterranean, and is bordered by what is left of the ancient Laurentum. We are told by the ancient writers that this coast was lined with a thick growth of magnificent laurel trees, which in Italy attain a height sufficient to form dense forests. The neighboring city, now nearly obliterated, took its name from these woods of bay. They disappeared in the second century of our era, and now few laurels are found among the trees of that thick wood. The King seems disposed to spend as little time under the roof of the Quirinal Palace as formerly under that of Pitti. There are now noises from fifty houses belonging to the Crown, the greater part of them the residences in prosperous days of the deposed Princes. The King, day before yesterday, went back to the north, after only four days spent here for the visit of the new year. The people of Naples are promised their turn, after months of patient waiting.

A RELIGIOUS FÊTE.

Today is the festa of the Epiphany, and most of the shops are shut. Last night the Roman rabble had, as usual, their penny-trumpet riot under the walls of the University of the Sapienza, and the din was kept up until after midnight. But these tin-whistle amusements are gradually losing their attraction for the people, as they outgrow the infantile habits of an uninstructed intelligence, in which the Church has thought it wise to keep them. This has been the great sin of the priests in Italy, in Spain, in Ireland, and in Mexico; laboring to maintain an intellectual vacuity, and to make credulous fools of the masses of the population; thinking there to preserve society and promote true religion.

Parliament's Future Work—The Question of Taxation—Municipal Organization—A New Anniversary—Measures for the Working Classes—The Land Census—The Annexed Provinces.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BERLIN, Saturday, Dec. 30, 1871.

The Prussian Government has not dismissed the Chambers for the Christmas recess without in some measure redeeming its promises given in the opening speech, on attaching its resolution to stand conscientiously by its announced programme. The measures initiated do not go as far as many reformers might wish, but as Ministers claim for them the character only of installments of progressive and systematic reform, the public is ready to condone defects which time may remedy, and to meet with grateful recognition the avowed intention of the Crown to comply with popular demands.

THE QUESTION OF TAXATION.

This explanation applies above all to the proposed reform of taxation, which represents as yet, indeed, only a very lame and halting measure, aiming at nothing beyond the abolition of the grist tax and parity of the slaughter tax, and the remission of income tax to the lower half of the lowest class of tax-payers. The incompleteness of this reform has been felt the more seriously, as semi-official papers, speaking usually with the full authority of ministerial inspiration, strongly denied proposals advanced by the organs of public opinion, and backed, as is well known, by the entire people, recommending the abolition of taxes, which financiers would find it difficult to justify on other ground than traditional policy. Such an impost is the newspaper tax, a tax—as a leading Liberal politician has aptly termed it—on the improvement of the intellect. The Provinzial Correspondenz at first met the public clamors for the discontinuance of this unpopular duty with an emphatic "never," which now, however, turns out to have possessed no more meaning than Rochefort's historic "never," for a few days ago the very same organ at the instigation of higher inspiration has completely turned round, vindicating the refusal of Government to repeal the newspaper tax on the ground purely of financial expediency, there not being sufficient funds to spare for a concession, which, on the ground of principle, Prince Bismarck declares himself willing to make as soon as it shall be practicable. For the present, and while the immediate effects of the late war continue to touch with especial severity the lower strata of society, the Chancellor's desire is, above all, directed to relieve these classes, and this he can only accomplish by a remission of income tax. To the same object the other financial measure, viz., the abolishment of the grist and slaughter tax, is merely subservient, though it would recommend itself even without that advantage, on its own merits, for a more inconvenient tax for the public it is impossible to devise. At present a staff of customs officers is kept in almost every town to examine almost every parcel passing in by the gates and to levy a toll upon every bit of meat, and every fowl and egg, as well as on all millers' and bakers' produce, while at the same time a strict police supervision is observed within the walls to watch over the full carrying out of the law, subjecting every baker's shop and butcher's yard, nay, in a manner, every private dwelling, to the intrusive surveillance of excise officials. Not only does this institution absorb a great part of its own gains by the necessity of sustaining a numerous and efficient staff, and raise the price of the most indispensable commodities materially, but it is, however, resented by the townspeople as a most invidious and unjust burden, which for years it has been the endeavor of the liberals to throw off. The lowest class of income tax-payers, including chiefly the humblest working population, cannot be grudged the trifling boon conferred upon them by Prince Bismarck, amounting in many cases to no more than annually thirty or forty cents. But the concession can only be accepted as a first and not over-liberal installment, for the screw has been put on income tax-payers during the last six or seven years with increasing rigor, raising the quota to about the highest figure to which the property of any man is amenable. Practically the tax is assessed by the Administrative officers, viz.: the landraths of circles, and these men have for a long time had a growing pressure put upon them from above, and have, moreover, on their own account, viz.: to gain a reputation as good servants of the Crown, squeezed as much out of their circles as they possibly could manage. The impost has now risen beyond the proportion prescribed by the letter of the law, but that being far from lenient was now really intended to be fully carried out. The higher classes, therefore, require a remission of direct taxation quite as urgently as their humbler brethren. The official papers now definitely announce the newspaper tax to be the next doomed to fall, after which the tax on salt is to be dropped. The latter was materially reduced some years ago at the cost of the enactment of obnoxious police supervision, greatly impeding the employment of the valuable article for agricultural purposes.

MUNICIPAL ORGANIZATION.

Next to taxation municipal organization is the branch of administration most in need of reform, both for political purposes and for reasons of general expediency. Municipal organization is a part of the Prussian political system which the touch of liberalizing modern ideas has never up to the present moment reached, in spite of the vehement outcry annually raised against the antiquated feudalist institution. Landed property is, by the Prussian law, invested with certain privileges of mediæval origin which are fast growing into burdens. The administration of "circles" is still almost exclusively in the hands of the great landed proprietors, (Rittergutsbesitzer,) who, in return for this right secured to them by the strong hand of Government, have been compelled to pay the price of almost total submission to the protecting power. Peasant proprietors, a class growing rapidly in wealth as in intelligence, and towns are still almost absolutely excluded from circle representation. The administration has thus preserved its aberrated character of aristocratic conservatism, but only at the cost of efficiency and by opposing almost insuperable obstacles to any kind of reform. Landed proprietors, though still clinging conscientiously to their traditional programme, have now come to understand that the reforms which they are pledged to discountenance, are in reality the most valuable promoters of their own wealth, by opening roads and traffic, increasing the wants of their customers, and multiplying facilities for improving their land. Thus the barrier of feudalist prejudice has gradually and almost insensibly given way. But it is not only with respect to circle representation that the insufficiency of the present system has come to be felt. The possession of a "rittergut," i. e., a landed property, with certain titles, involves privileges which confer power on the owner, but at the same time involve responsibility and duties. In the days of non-education the latter attributes were hardly seriously felt, because there was no one to call the owners to account. They were lords in their own domains, continued to administer a rough semi-justice to their dependents, who were too illiterate to perceive when and where the law was transgressed, whilst the central Government gladly winked at transgressions committed by its supporters. Moreover, the arrangement saved the Government trouble and expense, for police was administered gratuitously, and the most influential class of an independent population were by it converted into responsible servants of the Crown. The progress of education undermined this state of things, both by exercising a pressure on government to watch over the strict fulfillment of its behests and by creating a public demand to call the lordly administrators to a searching account, itself too vitally interested in their removal not to detect and bring to public cognizance every flaw observable in their conduct. This is the more annoying, as the privileged class have not generally the brains on their side, and such of their members as have, are not willing to bestow them in defense of an antiquated privilege of doubtful use. Thus the exercise of Police administration has come to be felt as a burden which most landed proprietors would be happy to discard, even though many are loth to say so. It is to be regretted that Ministers have not at once turned the condition of things to better account by inaugurating a really popular reform. Their reasons we are not yet acquainted with, for only the bill has been published, without the customary explanations; the latter are probably reserved for the time after the reassembling of Parliament. A similar measure to that now proposed was brought in two years ago, but thrown out on account of its inefficiency. The present is an advance on the bill of 1869, but not a very great one. The Police privilege of landed proprietors is by it entirely abolished, and local boards are to be appointed instead to administer Police in small districts of one or more Communes, as the case may require. These boards are to be composed merely of honorary members, receiving no pay, and held responsible in the first instance to "circle" boards, comprising the landrath, and six members likewise honorary and unpaid. The latter boards are sure in the generality of cases to be ably constituted, as almost every circle contains some intelligent men, si-devant lawyers or public servants, who are up to the work, and take an interest in performing it. But there is no guarantee that the local boards, or rather the offices of local Magistrates—for as a rule one man is to act as executive officer—will be well filled. At first, doubtless, sufficient interest will still be felt in the task by the present Police authorities to give their aid gratuitously, but it will not take long to tire them of it, and then the former plan of appointing paid Magistrates will have to be resorted to as the only one offering a guarantee for efficient and permanent service. The discussion in Parliament may still alter some of the provisions, though Government is not credited with great anxiety to yield much further; however practically insufficient its proposals may be, they claim public recognition on sentimental grounds, as making concessions to popular demands.

A NEW ANNIVERSARY.

The anniversary of the Emperor's accession to his present dignity is drawing near, and promises to be kept with particular splendor. Your readers will remember from last year's intelligence that it is a double anniversary, viz., of the creation both of the royal throne in 1701 and of the imperial in 1871. The real day is the 18th January, but as usual in Prussia, the nearest Sunday, viz., the 21st January, is set apart for the religious celebration. The 18th will be kept in Court circles by a convocation of the chapter of the Black Eagle to proceed with the investiture of new knights. The creation of an imperial throne is to be more lastingly commemorated, in addition to numerous other memorials, by the erection of a monument to the first German Empire, the "Holy Roman Empire" under Frederick Barbarossa. For this purpose Emperor William proposes to have a tower, built in the mediæval style of architecture, to rise from the ruins of Barbarossa's family castle, Staufland, in Wurtemburg, the seat, centuries ago, of the house of Hohenstauffen, the most powerful family that has graced the German throne. The funds are to be raised by public subscription, under the patronage of His Majesty himself, and also of the King of Wurtemburg, in whose territory the castle is situated, and of Prince Bismarck.

MEASURES FOR THE WORKING CLASSES.

A fresh proof has been given of the assiduous attention which the German Government devotes to the political questions connected with the working classes. Prince Bismarck has handed to the Imperial Chancellerie for elaboration the draught of a decree ordering the appointment of "Arbeitsaemter," i. e., of authorities in certain districts who are to act as supervisors of the laboring population, and take note not only of their condition, state of wealth, education, &c., but also of the political currents observable among them. The measure shows that the "Red Spectre" still gives the Government trouble, indeed, it constitutes the great danger apprehended above.

The reports on the late census are still very incomplete; not all are published, and such as are still require careful revision. The first superficial calculation of the population of the capital has resulted in the figure of 826,013, including the garrison, but exclusive of the corps diplomatique, making a further addition of about 400 persons. This is a considerable increase on the figure of the last census, but stops far below the popular and superficial estimate which assumed the population to amount to as much as 900,000.

THE NEW PROVINCES.

By far greater interest than to these figures attaches to such as reach us from the new German provinces west of the Rhine, which form a valuable commentary on the spirit with which the annexed population receive the new régime. A considerable decrease is noted almost every where, due partly to deaths occasioned by the late war, but principally to emigration of natives who refuse to submit to the new order of things. Unsatisfactory as the reflections must needs be to which these figures give rise, the French have been careful beforehand to lessen the shock by exaggerating absurdly the disquieting facts, and making assertions, in comparison with which the ascertained facts appear trifling. Thus a report was circulated that Strasbourg, a year and a half ago a city with a population of 84,600, had dwindled down to 82,000, thanks to the conquest. After so bold an allegation, it looks almost like a triumph of Government that the census return still enumerates about 80,000 inhabitants, the majority of which, viz., 41,300, are males, and 38,500 females. The garrison is included in this figure, but so it was in the previous, and its strength is shown to be nearly equal in both cases, amounting to about 7,000. The French employes have of course returned to France, but their place has been taken by a corresponding contingent of Germans. The difference of 4,000 is therefore only to be accounted for by deaths during the siege, and emigration. Considerable as the number may seem, it by no means fully expresses the amount of French sympathy still existing in the city. Colmar has lost more inhabitants in proportion, being a city of only about a quarter the size of Strasbourg, and the difference amounting to 1,853. In July, 1870, the lists showed a civil population of 22,927, which the war reduced to 22,583 still on the register in July, 1871; and 1st December no more than 21,074 were found. Government organs endeavor to explain the unsatisfactory diminution by an apprehension described as irrational and absurd, felt with regard to the impending conscription. Odnoxious as the proposed compulsory service unquestionably is to the Alsato-Lotharingians, a riot to escape its provisions would manifest itself more at the time immediately preceding the conscription than nine months before. It is pleasant to find the various rumors of murders and assaults committed on Prussians in Elsass to be contradicted, but the above figures give too unequivocal confirmation to the impression which the violent anti-German agitations still in progress in Elsass must produce, to admit of a doubt that hatred of the new master empire is still general in the province.

THE PRESENT COURSE OF MR. HORACE GREELEY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

There was a time when the detection of Horace Greeley would have been a serious blow to the Republican Party. Happily for the country, that time has passed. The Tribune has lost the high position of a leading party organ, falling little by little, until its opinions and utterances are quoted approvingly by the Democratic Press of the State and Union. Can a deeper depth of degradation than this be reached? By outrageous misrepresentation, encouragement of faction, and attempts to divide the party, the Tribune has forfeited the high place which it once held in the esteem of Republicans, and whether it does or does not support the nominee of the Philadelphia Convention is a matter of small consequence. Whatever course that paper pursues, will not jeopardize the success of the ticket.

Ten years ago Horace Greeley was considered in the country as the epitome of honesty; the Tribune was received by the dwellers on the green sward as the true gospel, and its teachings believed without question. Since that time the influence of the Tribune has declined; within the last year the decline has been rapid. The paper is yet largely read, but it is from habit; its power as a maker or director of public opinion is gone. Better authority is now required in the rural districts in support of an opinion than "the Tribune says so." In eighteen months Horace Greeley has thrown down a reputation which he was a lifetime in building. In communities where his name was most reverenced, he is now regarded as utterly unworthy of confidence. By abuse of all who will not acknowledge his power, he has alienated his warmest friends.

The influence of the Tribune with Republicans in the rural districts is greatly exaggerated, by none more so than its editor. The men of 1840 are passing away, and those occupying their places do not require the Tribune, or any other paper, to think for them. The soldier element is a large item in the voting population of the country. The veterans of the rebellion and their friends are a very respectable body of voters; they do not patiently listen to aspersions of the General who led them to victory, or place implicit confidence in the words of the man who hastened to Richmond to bail Jeff. Davis. The farming community, though not equally educated with the editor of the Tribune in the theory of a national debt and taxes, understand facts as well, if not better; and when told that the Administration which is paying the national debt and each year reducing the taxes by millions, is a failure, don't believe it.

The unfair course taken by the Tribune in the present New-York Custom-house investigation is sufficient to injure it seriously, if no other cause existed. With how much fairness has the Tribune treated the examination? With less than the most ultra-partisan members of the Democratic Press. The testimony taken by the Retrenchment Committee has been twisted and tortured to suit the purposes of the Tribune; that portion of it exposing the falsehoods of the Tribune garbled, and in some instances suppressed. That wrongs have been committed by employes of the Custom-house is apparent. Inspectors have been fed, and weighers bribed. In transactions of this kind the party giving and the party receiving the bribe are equally guilty. The Tribune demands punishment only for the tempted; the tempter, according to its standard of morals, is a worthy man. The Tribune, however, is actuated in this matter not by a desire to correct fraud and purify the Custom-house, but to connect Gen. Grant with it. It is a part of the campaign against his renomination. I have read carefully the evidence taken before the Committee of Investigation, as published in the Tribune, Times and World, and have as carefully compared these reports, which, in some instances, differ so widely. There has not been a single scintilla of evidence elicited to connect Gen. Grant with the shortcomings of any officer in the Custom-house. The World unhesitatingly says there has, and the Tribune, by mean insinuation, says as much. The testimony published in the Tribune contains abundant evidence of having been doctored to suit the purpose of the paper. A word is omitted here, inserted there—sentences manipulated—and their meaning changed, to afford standing-ground for an editorial. The testimony of Mr. Stewart, condemning the General Order system, is published at great length, and commented on with gusto, but that portion of it with regard to efficiency of Collector Murphy is carefully kept out of sight. This is the fairness of the Tribune. The animus of the Tribune's opposition to the Administration of President Grant is so apparent that the poison is an antidote.

When the exposure of the frauds and corruptions of the Tammany Ring was made, the Tribune, until compelled by public opinion to notice, ignored it. The Tribune first made Connolly the "white dog" on which to lay all the sins of the Ring. Later, Tweed was treated to a mild reproof, and finally placed by the side of Connolly. Peter B. Sweeny, the brains of the Ring, and in some respects the worst of the four, was apologized for and defended up to the hour of his flight to Canada. A. Oakey Hall, the Jeremy Diddler of the Ring, remains; and for him the Tribune has no word of reproach. This is another example of the fairness of the Tribune. An Administration pure in all things is blackened as corrupt; the Tammany Ring is sustained as long as possible, and the last remnant of it fostered and petted.

The Clerk of the State Senate is charged with corruption. Mr. Trowbridge should take immediate means to prove himself innocent. The affidavit published first in the Albany Evening Journal is insufficient for this purpose. The matter should be fully investigated. The affidavit of Gracie was first published in the Tribune, and hardly a day has passed since without reference to it. James Husted, the "Bald Eagle of Westchester," is charged with greater corruption. In company with Alex. Frear, a pupil of the Tammany Ring, he has been robbing the City of New-York by means of a gravel contract. The Tribune sees in the act of Husted only merit. It says that the transaction "involves no necessary imputation of fraud against 'Husted, Frear & Co.,' any more than if they had bought a thousand barrels of apples of a farmer in Westchester County, and sold them in our City for a good profit." Perhaps there may be no difference according to the Tribune's standard of morality, but to the people of the county the compared transactions have a very different look. The people of New-York City are permitted to buy apples in the open market. If one dealer asks $4 per barrel and another but $2.50 for apples of the same quality, they buy the cheapest. In the gravel case no discretion was allowed to the tax-payers; the "Ring" decided for them, and purchased of its tools, Husted and Frear, for $9.90 per cubic yard, gravel which other dealers were ready to furnish for $2.60. Transactions like this are called fraudulent in the country. There are those among us who think that the high price of gravel was a reward to the "Bald Eagle" for past and prospective services. The Tribune considers the explanation of Mr. Husted, in the Assembly, as a complete refutation of the charge, and styles the transaction legitimate. I fail to see that it is any more a complete refutation than the affidavit of Mr. Trowbridge. But there is a difference between my standing-point and that of the Tribune. Mr. Husted is the pet of the Tribune, and a Tammany Republican. Mr. Trowbridge is neither. Association would bias the decision of the Tribune. I am indifferent between the two men. Justice should be meted out to both Husted and Trowbridge. Neither has cleared himself of the charged frauds. It was in the Tribune's eye a sin for Thomas Murphy to be associated with Tweed and Connolly in a private real estate speculation, but none for James Husted to contract with Alexander Frear, (the facile Chairman of the "Ring's" Committee on Cities,") to plunder the City of New-York. The fairness of the Tribune is past finding out.

Horace Greeley stood by the cradle of the Republican Party and was one of its sponsors in baptism! Another Greeley stood near the bier by the cradle. To William H. Seward belongs the very rare, if not unique, honor of forgiving the great Republican Party. No man ever commanded the love and reverence of the party in an equal degree. In an evil hour, he sought to make the party recreant to the high principles in which he had instructed it. Did the party act at his bidding forget its principles and follow him to Johnsonism? The name of Seward, once so highly honored, is scarce ever spoken by Republicans now, and only spoken with regret! When Seward failed, is it possible that Greeley can succeed? Can Greeley lead the party from its principles? Failing, can he overthrow or divide it? The foundations of the Republican Party are broad and deep, firmly fixed in the bed-rock of principle. Horace Greeley will waste his strength against them in vain; he cannot topple a stone from the highest battlement. For fifteen years I sat at the feet of Horace Greeley, believing with blind confidence the teachings of the Tribune. Sometimes he went astray, and I felt that he would come back again. I had faith in his honesty, and stood by him when others fell away. But now he has turned wholly away. His refusal to sign the call for the Philadelphia Convention admits of but one construction. This act of apostacy cannot be explained. Horace Greeley is false to the principles of the Republican Party. As the party refused to follow William H. Seward, so it will him. The unfaithful Tribune is powerless to harm the Republican Party.

HOUSEKEEPING EXPENSES.

Servants' Wages.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I read a good deal about the mode of housekeeping in your paper. It appears to me that none of your correspondents ever thought of the small item of wages and labor. Let housekeepers oppose, with all their might, the imposition the servants practice upon them in asking and receiving such enormous wages and pay for daily labor. Then a great evil would be remitted in housekeeping, paying $14 and $18 a month for a chamber-maid and cook, and both servants, at these prices, incompetent, insolent, and lazy. You speak of our low-priced woolens having been driven out of the market. My tailor explained this in some measure. He says his customers do not call for the low-priced woolens any more, for the simple reason that the labor to make a pair of low-priced pantaloons is just as high as to make a high-priced pair, and a good article outwears a poor one, and is the end to keep. Reduce wages and labor and abolish monopoly! Housekeeping will be cheaper. Provisions, just as raised in the country, are cheap enough, but before the consumer gets them, they go through many hands, and each charges enormous profits, principally under the plea of "high wages and labor."

A FARMER.

Necessity of Household Education.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

"Yankee" is correct about the right kind of wife, and "Vaterland" is correct in his statement of the manner in which American mothers are rearing their daughters. If mothers would educate their daughters into the mysteries of housekeeping, and pay less attention to crocheting fancy needle-work, it would be better for the rising generation. I have a good wife, who was taught housekeeping thoroughly; everything about my rooms is as neat as can be, and my old bachelor friends think I am as easily situated as any one could desire. My wife does not wear camel-hair shawls nor velvet cloaks, neither do we occupy a whole house. I do not understand her secret, but I know we have plenty to eat and always room for one or two friends; she takes my salary, say at $1,500 per annum. I find after paying life insurance on $10,000 that we have a few dollars to put in the bank. I would like to know how many of your readers receive an income of $5,000 per annum? I feel sorry for any one who has to struggle through life on such an income. My wife says we could live on less than a thousand dollars a year if we had to. I know it costs me less to live married than it did when I was single; so, Mr. Editor, do not let your correspondents discourage young men by telling them they cannot live married on less than $5,000 per annum.

EUREKA.

NEW-YORK, Wednesday, Jan. 24, 1872.

Appeal for Radical Taxation.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

From the tenor of your article on household expenses, you appear to look for a remedy in a reduced tariff and taxation, the direct effect of which would be to reduce incomes also, perhaps leaving the disproportion of expense to income as unsatisfactory as now. Proof that low taxation, and consequent cheap living, curtails incomes is seen plainly by visiting Canada. Proof that under the same system of national taxation, family expenses are less elsewhere than in New-York, may be found not only in New-England towns, but in many large cities of the United States.

Æsthetic refinement has developed in this cosmopolitan City more than in American cities generally, but not more than in Boston. Yet there its demands financially are more moderate, and its enjoyment more attainable by studying less for show than for the substance. The same remarks apply to Philadelphia, and perhaps other places. The value of land on this island is not so great but that, if by quick transit the upper part could be built up, rents might be made to average less, or, if not, then the introduction of the apartment-house system to the requirements of moderate incomes would retain in City limits numerous families whose votes and social influence are needed.

Families with incomes of $10,000 must learn to stop rivaling in display those even more wealthy, those with $5,000 must not expect to live as extravagantly as those with $10,000. Those with less than $5,000 must make up their minds to live within it. All should save some part of their income, however small. If any considerable number of decent people should adopt such principles their example in time would be actually influential on others, both above and below them, and a more healthy tone would pervade New-York society. You may be right in saying that as things are at present $5,000 is the lowest limit of good living here for a small family. As that limit is above the average income of the respectable people among whom your paper circulates, I presume this communication does not in spirit exceed the bounds of the subject you are considering.

MODERATION.

$7,500 the Minimum Cost of Respectable Housekeeping.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The question you have broached of the cost of living in New-York is important to us denizens of Gotham, and your manner of treating the subject correct and timely. You say: "Our belief is that such a family, embracing, say four children and two servants, keeping as good a table as American families are accustomed to keep, and giving their children a good education, showing the hospitality which all 'middle class' Americans do, and without the luxury of horses or a carriage, can literally save nothing out of an income of $5,000 per annum."

This statement is strictly and literally correct, with an amendment substituting $7,000 or $7,500 for $5,000. Your remarks preceding the sentence quoted and this quotation describe accurately my own family and its conditions.

I have for many years kept an accurate account of my receipts and expenditures. My family consists of myself, wife and four children, all grown, and two servants. We occupy a moderately-sized house, not large, in a respectable and quiet quarter. My wife and I practice strict economy, she going daily to market and buying cleverly, and at home personally giving out the supplies from the store-room and superintending all the details of our housekeeping in all its departments with diligence and vigilance. In dress she is economical, she and our daughter, doing much of the work of making up and preparation themselves. There are no drones in our household.

For breakfast we rarely have any other meat than what may be left over from the previous day's dinner. Our bills for carriage hire were last year less than $60. Our amusements during the year cost about the same sum. No horse, no dog, not even a cat, is fed at our expense. Fifty dollars per annum will cover our expenditures for wines and liquors, and fifty cents all that is spent for tobacco. We give few entertainments, and those given are of an inexpensive character.

Now, Mr. Editor, under all these conditions, adverse to extravagance and favorable for the economy which is duly practiced, my expenditures in 1871 were $8,000. Of this sum $500 was paid for new furniture, leaving $7,500 as the expenses of living. Of this latter sum, $2,000 was paid for the item of house rent. We all know that this is not a high rental at this day in this City. Ten years ago my expenses were $2,500 a year. Five years ago they were $3,000, all the time with the same family as now.

If you will show me how a respectable family of six, "keeping as good a table as Americans are accustomed to keep, and giving their children a good education, showing the hospitality which all 'middle class' Americans do," can live and save money in New-York City on less than $7,000 per annum, I will be the first to adopt the new system, showing economy in housekeeping, it appears strange to me that one of the great leaks in house expenses has not yet been touched upon. I mean the long dresses which are now in use, made of $5 silks, for the purpose of sweeping the streets, the floors of theatres, churches, &c., &c. Only yesterday I saw a woman walk over a mile on Broadway, with her black silk dress sweeping the dust and filth from the sidewalks. If this customs is to continue, men will not wish to marry.

An Improvement in Scrapple.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have noticed with much pleasure the response of "Epicure" to the request for the receipt for "scrapple." With your permission I will suggest an improvement, to wit, substitute Graham flour instead of buckwheat. In trying mush or hominy I find the rolling of the meal in brown bread-crumbs, instead of white flour or Indian meal, greatly facilitates the browning, consequently the article to be fried does not absorb so much fat. I think the scrapple would be decidedly improved by this change.

A HOUSEKEEPER.

Shame on Such Work.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Will the lady who furnished the receipt for "scrapple," confer a favor upon a young housekeeper of five years' experience by offering other receipts—the result of her long and happy experience? The question of income is one in which all housekeepers feel a deep interest, and sincerely grateful are we to our sympathetic friend, the Daily Times, for its invaluable efforts in the work of reform. To meet the present urgent demand for comfortable homes in New-York, apartment houses must be built, with rents varying from $500 to $1,500 a year. We, with many others, are looking forward hopefully to the completion of such houses, when we can avail ourselves of homes of our own. Where in New-York can a family consisting of a gentleman, wife and child, upon an income of $3,000 a year, obtain a home and live with any degree of comfort? This is a question which is puzzling me. Any light upon the subject is earnestly desired by one who is compelled, by the high rents in New-York, to be

A BROOKLYNITE.

BROOKLYN, Thursday, Jan. 25, 1872.

The Cost of Living on $2,000.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I, for one, have been interested in the discussion now going on in your paper by correspondents, and in your editorial remarks, concerning the "cost of living." You assume that a man having an income of $5,000 per annum, a wife and family, can lay up nothing after paying the reasonable and necessary expenses of living. For my part, I do not see why such a person cannot save something, especially if his family is not larger than the usual average. Any man having such a family, and spending his entire income of $5,000, can have none of my sympathy if he comes out minus. But the proper and serious question is, how can a man with an income of $1,000 per annum and under get along, and support a wife and family, furnishing them sufficient food, adequate clothing, suitable and healthful apartments in which to live, and the many little incidentals which every family needs to be comfortable. There are many married men in this City whose income is not over and oftentimes less than $1,000. They are in many cases men of education, filling positions at once responsible and laborious, in mercantile, manufacturing, and other houses in the City, and find the miserable stipend wholly inadequate to make their families comfortable. All such as I have referred to above must be gratified to the "good lady of the house" for her recipe for "scrapple," for it seems now that all can have "a good, square meal;" but cannot some one suggest something analogous to "scrapple," by which a person can be sheltered and clothed and kept warm?

NEW-YORK, Thursday, Jan. 25, 1872.

A Rear View of the Question.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have been exceedingly amused by the perusal of certain doleful epistles relating to the hard-ships of "economical living," recently published in your invaluable journal, and especially by that from "A Sufferer." This impecunious gentleman, with an income of more than $27 a day the year round, and owning the house he lives in, finds only bitterness and gloom where he ought to have peace and contentment. Perhaps he has not told us half his distress. My own family consists of six persons, all adults. My brother and myself furnish the only means we have, and our combined income does not exceed $2,000 a year. We pay a rent of $100 per month, and have plenty of room, plenty of conveniences, and an up-town, central neighborhood. We have everything to eat, drink and wear that we can reasonably wish for, and are not niggardly regarding our personal comforts. In the Summer time we spend a month or two in the country with relatives, and in the Winter time entertain our country cousins. When the happy Christmas time is come we find it in our hearts and purses to make each other gifts, and often gifts of value, aside from their greater value of affection. My brother and myself enjoy our pipe or cigar, and occasionally our glass of wine or ale. On Sundays our mite is always ready, and the deacon does not pass us in vain. Sometimes we go to a good theatre or the opera. After all this, we also find a way to "lay up treasure" in the bank, giving time to thank God for His mercies and loving goodness. Let me add, that besides our own living, we support a numerous society of non-producers, to wit: Four little fishes in our aquarium, two tadpoles, three water-beetles, a lizard, a snapping-turtle, a land-turtle and a golden canary, and all on an income of $2,000 annually! Now, the secret is a very simple one. It is management.

ROSELEAF.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, Jan. 25, 1872.

A Satisfied Man.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I don't know that I am "spoiling for a fight," and yet I do want to pitch into you, and those of your correspondents who, writing on the question of how much is necessary for a family to live on respectably and comfortably, either write of that of which they know nothing, or have learned little by experience. If you are indeed desirous of getting light on the subject, allow me to give of my own experience.

I have a wife and a daughter, with an average through the year of at least one relative in my family; in all, five mouths to feed, for I keep a "help" to whom I give twelve dollars per month. We always have meat twice a day, and that of the best; sirloin steak, rib-pieces for roast, &c., with a variety of vegetables and fruits in their season—a plenty of all; yes, and enough for a friend who may drop in. In short, my table is good enough for any one, and well supplied.

My wife and daughter are well clad, not fashionably or extravagantly, but well enough to appear in any circle. My shelves are supplied with a good share of the literature of the day, books magazines and papers, and we enjoy the intellectual privileges of the City. True, we do not attend the theatre, the opera, fancy balls, &c., but when a good concert or lecture offers, we have a dollar or two to spare.

In short, we live well, dress well, enjoy not only the necessaries of life, but many of its luxuries; move in a respectable circle, respect ourselves, and are respected by others. Beyond this, I pay my proportion toward the expenses of the church we attend, and have to give to the many excellent charities which are constantly presented.

A FIRST-CLASS NEW-YORK SECURITY AT A LOW PRICE.

The undersigned offer for sale the FIRST MORTGAGE SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD BONDS of the Syracuse and Chenango Valley Railroad, at 95 and accrued interest.

This road runs from the City of Syracuse to Smith's Valley, where it unites with the New-York Midland Railroad, thus connecting that city by a direct line of road with the Metropolis.

Its length is forty-two miles, its COST ABOUT $40,000 PER MILE, and it is MORTGAGED FOR LESS THAN $12,000 PER MILE; the balance of the funds required for its construction having been raised by subscription to the capital stock.

The road approaches completion. It traverses a populous and fertile district of the State, which insures it a paying business, and it is under the control of gentlemen of high character and ability. Its bonds possess all the requisites of an inviting investment. They are amply secured by a mortgage for LESS THAN ONE-THIRD THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY. They pay SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD INTEREST, and are offered five per cent. below par. The undersigned confidently recommend them to all classes of investors.

CAYUGA LAKE RAILROAD, State of New-York, 7 PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE GOLD BONDS.

THIRTY YEARS TO RUN, AND ISSUED FOR $20,000 PER MILE.

This road forms the shortest and most direct route from the great anthracite and semi-bituminous coal fields of Pennsylvania into the central part of this State, and will run in connection with the New-York Central Road, which it crosses at Cayuga Bridge. Traversing, as it does, the finest and most populous agricultural district, generally known as the "GARDEN OF THE STATE," its local traffic will be large, but its greatest source of revenue will be from its coal business. The road is being rapidly built, and will be in active operation during this year. From our knowledge of this enterprise, and after the most thorough investigation, we most confidently recommend the Bonds as a safe investment. We offer, for the present, the Bonds at 90 and accrued interest in currency.

Midland Railroad FIRST MORTGAGE 7 Per Cent. Gold Bonds,

LIMITED TO $60,000 PER MILE ON FINISHED ROAD.

The rapid progress toward completion of this great Trunk Line from New-York to the West and to Canada, enables us to offer to investors at PAR AND INTEREST a further limited issue of these favorite securities.

Upward of 300 miles of this road, including the New-Jersey section, are already finished, equipped, and in operation; and contracts with responsible parties have been made for its entire completion by the first day of July next. When this shall have been accomplished its earnings cannot fail to be large and highly remunerative, as it has advantages at least equal to those of any of its competitors for both local and through business. It is building for cash, of which nearly $5,000,000 have been furnished by subscription to its stock at PAR. The work is substantial, and, including equipment, has not exceeded in cost $30,000 per mile, which is less than one-third of the amount at which some of the trunk lines of roads leading from New-York are capitalized, and on which they are paying good dividends.

In view of these facts, the Midland First Mortgage Bonds must be regarded as a first-class security—quite as safe as Governments; and, by making the exchange at the present difference in price, holders of Midland Bonds will receive 10 per cent. more of revenue upon the amount invested than the holders of Government Bonds.
